Exhilarating Heights

It was a Sunday night in early January, I believe, at Trader Joe's in Cambridge. You: 5'1" or so; me: 5'11". We really caught each others' attention, yet I was reluctant to act. After leaving, I drove back to seek you, but you were gone. I've been thinking of you ever since! I would love to hear from you!
—Mainhappyguy@aol.com

No Kidding!

To the worm who accosted me Feb. 19 in the parking lot of the Arsenal branch of Watertown Savings Bank: Just because you're the proud propagator of vermin-in-training gives you no right to block the parking lot entrance to deploy and collect your spawn. Please be aware that you haven't yet repopulated the entire world with beings under your control, so don't get all angry and self-righteous at someone for expressing discontent with your inconsiderate and dangerous behavior. If I'm honking at you, it means I want you to realize you are inconveniencing me and I think that you should get out of everyone's way—not that I want to have a conversation with you on the merits of having children. (When you walked over to my car, I thought you had something germane to tell me, but I saw quickly that I needed to rethink rolling down my window.) Please, park in delineated parking spaces like the rest of us, instead of forcing us to watch a show of your dysfunction. Try to be an example to your children, and ratchet down your insanity. Oh, by the way: We all have fingers—you can save that lesson for the children.
—Ms. Constance

Don't Shoot The Messenger

To Tony: I can't believe you thought it was cool to razz me about still being a bike messenger at 35. Listen up, dude; I like being a bike messenger! While you sold out and went to work for Blue Cross, I've kept my dignity by being my own man (yeah, a lot of us dress alike, but that's because form follows function). It's great because I get to have everything my way; one minute I'm pushing for the rights of bikers to go everywhere with the same rights as car drivers, and the next I'm going through red lights and tearing down one-way streets. That's real freedom. You should try it; you might like it at your age. You know, I still get a thrill out of silently coming up from behind a pedestrian and then speeding within inches of their bodies as though I were passing through pylons on an obstacle course. You should see me stand on my seat as I take the stairs at City Hall—crazy stuff! I had that scar I got from a run-in with the postal truck turned into a tattoo of a two-headed dragon that looks cool (you have to look close to see the scar), so now every limb's got ink, including my head. I like not owning a car, and I save hundreds by not having a gym membership. With my hat on the other day, someone actually thought I was a "college kid." Can you believe that? My fellow bikers and I have a great lunch thing going on at Liberty Square, so you and everyone else can just keep on walking and leave us alone. I don't want to trade places with you one bit. They say life goes in cycles; well, in my case, I go on cycles wherever I damn please. Whooooopie!
—A Freak With Pride

Storm Stories

To Shavit, I believe, and the tall guy from the black Dodge Charger (whose name I didn't get): You came to our rescue Feb. 15 when our car was stuck in the ice on Peterborough Street. Thank you so much. We'd been digging out the car for over an hour, and you were the first guys who offered to help. I know we never would have managed to get the car out if it hadn't been for the joint effort. (The tow rope was a genius idea!) I just wanted to thank you again for coming to our rescue. If you hadn't left so quickly after the car was finally dragged from the ice, I'd have offered to buy both of you a drink, but instead I'll have to let you know how grateful my friends and I were via the IMPROPER. I hope that your kindness is reciprocated in the not-too-distant future. Thanks again.
—Three Very Grateful Ladies

Breaking the Ice

To the fantastic man who helped me out of my parking space at Monumen Square in Charlestown the day after the Valentine's Day ice storm: Thanks for being so sweet, gracious and thoughtful! You rule for coming back and asking me if I needed help. At th point, I'm quite sure I wouldn't have gotten out of the space any other way I would love to buy you a pint if you're game. Please e-mail me, or ju leave a note on the black TL—you know about where she'll be. Cheers, cheers, cheers!
—jvd0208@hotmail.com.

Hood Wink

To the BC sweatshirt guy: As my frien finished making her purchase Feb. 10 at the BC bookstore, you asked my opinion on BC sweatshirts. Of course, offered you assistance with your shopping. Having steered you away from a fashion faux-pas, I was hopin you'd show your gratitude by buying me a coffee. There's still time to right this wrong. E-mail me—at least to l me know if you went with the zipper just the hoodie.

Uncommon Courtesy

I lost my wallet/pocketbook Feb. 10 in the Public Garden. I want to thank the nice couple who brought it to City Hall and turned it in with all the credit card ID, keys and money. It's nice to know that there are still honest people in the world. You really saved me from a big headache. Thank you for your honesty and going out of your way to help. E-mail me.

rockie horoscope

MARCH 7 – 20, 2007 BY ROCKIE GARDINER

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Happy Birthday! Here's my gift: Follow the advice I've strewn throughout the horoscope. Some signs were affected by the powerful merger of the life-sustaining sun and unpredictable Uranus in Pisces, the repercussions of which might echo for a while. The other mutable signs, Gemini, Virgo and Sag, could be thrown by too much of too many good things when the Pisces sun tests generous Jupiter. Then there are the eclipses: the Virgo full moon and the Pisces new moon that can affect you for months to come.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Mercury's change of direction won't be a problem if you step aside and let colleagues claim the credit. More likely, accept the blame for misrepresenting the high-minded goals you once shared. Love-starved Rams have other fish to fry—namely, maximizing the highs before finding a way to survive the lows that romantic Venus puts you through this week. For openers, you'd better bury the credit cards. This way generous Jupiter's exuberant frolic with the goddess won't cost a fortune when it comes time to pay the piper.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

You may as well ride with the Rams, since it's your Venus ruler that's providing the fun (and the funds). However, your coworkers aren't about to mess with your mind if things go awry when Mercury flips. Instead, it's the folks in the family who could take a firm stand and hold their ground, especially if expensive construction work is involved. Don't summarily dismiss their suggestions; chances are you'll wind up with better quality and longer-lasting life from their advice. Experience counts.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

Gird yourself for the surprise that may be sprung when the impressionable Pisces sun is wedded to the erratic energy of Uranus. Their merger takes place in your career midheaven where your reputation resides. Also, if you happen to be infected by the ambient nuttiness—where your family's good name could be flushed down the toilet—protective, prestigious Jupiter in your Sag house of partners, past and present, is willing to come to the rescue and bail you out with big bucks or, if necessary, political capital.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

Can you bear to sit through another screening of the good, the bad and the endless? Saturn, dubbed a "malevolent" by the ancients, has been dominating your Leo money house for what seems like an eternity. But this week, it might feel like it is the last hurrah. That's because the planet of pragmatism and patience completes a rewarding grand fire trine with both lucky Venus in Aries and even luckier Jupiter in Sagittarius. Will the lunar and solar eclipses this month have a similar effect on a Moon Child when Saturn moves into Virgo during the eclipses of September?

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Read for Cancer. Info on the potential effect of having Saturn in your sign is always relevant, even if money matters aren't your primary concern right now. Your current run of good fortune shouldn't be denigrated, mainly because loving Venus and expansive Jupiter are offering opportunities to enjoy more than a few happy days. However, Lions should be careful that they don't grab far more than their fair share, especially around March 9, when grandiose Jupiter and the gullible Pisces sun form a challenging square.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

Remind yourself that the days just before and after the March 7, when your Mercury ruler turns direct, can be especially tricky. Because the Messenger is changing direction, no one can be sure which way the cookie will crumble. But crumble it will. Should you be buried in the debris from the sun's merger with disruptive Uranus, try to delay making a decision you're bound to stick with. Because their annual conjunction takes place in your Pisces house of partnerships, the situation will be fluid for a while.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

Relax; it's all good. Even with so much going on—some of it seemingly over the top—you'll be protected. That's because your harmonious Venus ruler is favorably aligned with both cautious Saturn and enthusiastic Jupiter. With both hindsight and foresight in your corner, it'll be difficult to go wrong. Besides, Mercury turning direct in your Aquarius house of creativity and risk suggests that you've learned the lessons of retrograde and are ready to move forward with your project. My suggestion: Go slow.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

The reasons might not be apparent; nonetheless, March may turn out to be the season for making lots of money. That's because generous Jupiter, straddling your house of values and valuables, is rewarding the constructive consistency of Saturn in your career midheaven, as well as your success, via popular Venus, with coworkers and clients. Don't knock it; the potential for enjoying the fruits of your labor is enormous. Along with the financial favors, the odds are that Venus, the flirt, will soon hook up with your sexy Pluto coruler.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

Like Aries and Leo, the other fire signs, along with Taurus and Libra, you're due to have a fine old time while your Jupiter ruler forms a rewarding grand trine with lovable Venus and law-abiding Saturn. Having Saturn's safety valve during the festivities should keep everyone from going way over the top, something Centaurs tend to do every chance they get. However, since exuberant Jupiter is in your sign, there's a danger that you'll call too much attention to yourself and blow some of the benefits of this beneficial arrangement.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Mercury turning direct in your house of finances, and how you feel about them, may clarify a few questions. But while Neptune continues its transit of Aquarius (for another four years), there's bound to be further grounds for confusion. By now you should be used to "tenuous and tricky." Luckily this month Caps are in line for a big bonanza from the joint efforts of Venus the Lesser Fortune and Jupiter the Greater Fortune, as they trine your upstanding Saturn ruler. Love, good luck, a healthy dose of happiness and some money? Maybe.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

Read for Capricorn and Pisces. Right now there are a few major events influencing your thinking. Start with Mercury's impending change of direction in your sign, which can feel like you've come to a full stop. Follow with a sense of uncertainty magnified by the sun's meeting with your explosive Uranus ruler in Pisces, its glyph of two fish headed in opposite directions. Since your partner might be in a better position chartwise than you, let him or her take the lead, at least through the new moon/solar eclipse on March 18.

THE BLACK ROSE 160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286. www.irishconnec tion.com. Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall-Quincy market area of Boston and is known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef and of course, Mother Sweeney's corned beef, a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself. For thirty years, The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftains, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

THE PURPLE SHAMROCK 1 Union Street, Boston, 617-227-2060. www. irishconnection. com. Located on the freedom trail across from Boston City Hall on Union Street. The Purple Shamrock is the perfect place to stop by and have a bite to eat. The fare is composed of New England specialties with burgers, sandwiches, hearty pastas, fresh seafood, tender steaks and other great favorites. After dark, The Purple Shamrock has nightly entertainment with a mix of live music, karaoke and DJ's. At The Purple Shamrock there is something for everyone.

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

WHERE'S RICKY RICARDO WHEN YOU NEED HIM?

Bringing a bit of pre-Castro Cuban sizzle to the Four Seasons, the Beacon Hill Civic Association held its annual dinner dance, Havana Nights, which featured a casino theme complete with gaming tables, Latin music, hot women in low-cut gowns and at least one guy with a pencil-thin mustache.

Among the notables on hand were Egyptian eminence grise Sherif Nada and the eternally lovely Mary, bodacious beauty Mary English, blonde bombshell Jennifer Donaldson, hyperactive tractor heir Stephens Dunne and the swanlike Molly, Beacon Hill party pair Jeff and Christine McCormick, thoroughbreds Elizabeth and Ogden White, the fun-loving foursome of Tom and Kim Reohr and Megan and David Zug, ubiquitous do-gooder Dan Mullin, the soignée Nicole Pirnie, and one woman who happily gambled her husband's chips away, saying, "It feels better when you're losing money for a good cause."

The only downside to the evening: no Cuban cigars for sale, although we suspect that more than a few contraband Cohibas were consumed once the band packed up and everyone headed home.

ANIMAL HOUSE REDUX...

The fundraiser-cum–frat party known as the Crystal Ball raised the roof and raised some hell while raising serious dough for the Steppingstone Foundation at the InterContinental Boston hotel.

"I hear there's a girl passed out in the bathroom, but no puking yet," said one guest, who put the odds at 2-5 that someone would be sick before the night was through. "It's just not a Steppingstone party 'til there's vomiting."

As off-putting as that might sound, it was meant as a compliment, but perhaps a more diplomatic way of putting it would be to say that the party was full of youthful high spirits.

As one middle-aged mom pointed out, with regard to all the nubile young things: "It's all high and tight, and when they shake it like a Polaroid picture, nothing falls out."

Within the fresh-faced crowd were the organization's founder, Mike Danziger, eternal playboy Alec Stern, Red Sox front-office babe Colleen Reilly, Brookline socialite Wendy Pierce, the supremely chic Caroline Loucas, the ever affable Jonathan Koerner, the stunning Stephanie Alfond, überhipster Swing Robertson, statuesque beauty Grayson Moore, and delightful young thing Fritha Reeve, to name but a few.

Although yours truly left before there was a confirmed case of reverse peristalsis, the bar was still open and the dance floor was still jammed, and even if no one actually got ill at the event, it's a safe bet that more than a few people felt decidedly unwell the next morning.

TYIN' ON THE FEEDBAG...

Any party that requires its own map to navigate undoubtedly ranks as major, and the Spinazzola Gala at the World Trade Center remains the granddaddy of all local food events, with several thousand people grazing at tables manned by hundreds of top restaurants and wineries.

Seen milling around in black-tie were such celebrities and socialites as Queer Eye star Ted Allen, foundation founder Chris Spinazzola and his hilarious other half, Marjorie Clapprood, Channel 5 vixen Susan Wornick with head Red Sox wife Stacey Lucchino, North End real estate mack daddy Matteo Gallo squiring the gorgeous Nicole Vellucci, überrestaurateur Seth Woods with his glamazon wife, Megan, and business partner, Jeff Gates, uncorked diva Karen Holmes-Ward, City Hall factotum Tony Nunziante, Red Cross talking head Donna Morrissey, reformed male model Newman Flanagan, private chef Roberta Traynor, PR powerhouses Kristen Daly and Margrette Mondillo, irrepressible banking bigwig Richard DeAgazio, Brahmin bar owner George Lewis, such celebrity chefs as Michael Schlow, Angela and Seth Raynor, Ming Tsai, Todd English, Tony Ambrose, Marc Orfaly, Lydia Shire and Evan Deluty, and one woman who said, "Don't take my picture. I haven't had Botox in nine months."

Not surprisingly, the most commonly heard question was, "Do I have anything in my teeth?" and there were more than a few guests who lamented the lack of toothpicks. Slightly more surprising, however, was the woman who loudly informed a friend, "I quit drinking... but I still smoke and sleep with the occasional prostitute."

WHAT A PEAR!

How do you get a buzz-worthy crowd of hot young tastemakers to come out on a Monday night? Promise them free vodka.

At least that's the tactic Grey Goose took to debut its new pear-flavored vodka, throwing a swanky VIP party hosted by blonde bombshell Jenny McCarthy at the corporate headquarters of Legal Sea Foods on the Boston Fish Pier.

The place was transformed into a sylvan glade, and pretty much everything that could be adorned was decorated with pears, as waiters passed delicious little nibbly things and bartenders furiously shook cocktails containing the new liquor.

Prominent among the throng were Legal's head honcho Roger Berkowitz, ubiquitous news anchor Janet Wu, outspoken conservationist Linda Orel, überbartender Nick Giraldo, and one man who said, "I don't know what's sweeter—these drinks or the chance to ogle Jenny McCarthy's rack in person."

Our guess is that it was a tie. IB

SWEET THINGS

These days there are high-end versions of pretty much anything you can buy, from jeans to dog beds, but certain luxury items seem to attract attention on the level of addiction. For many women, for example, there's nothing like the siren song of really nice shoes, and in this our annual luxury issue, writer Carmen Nobel talks to some of Boston's self-confessed shoe addicts about the designer pairs in their closets. Meanwhile, Wyndham Lewis offers a tour of some of the most luxurious spaces that most locals never see—the presidential suites at the city's finest hotels—while Jolyon Helterman shows you how to drop a whole lot of money on a truly memorable meal (or a glass of the insanely good stuff).

PAST IMPERFECT

Thanks for bringing me back to the haunts of my sleaze-filled youth in "If These Walls Could Talk" (March 7). I spent many hours in almost every one of the establishments mentioned, with hundreds of hours on stage at the Rat, Bunrattys and the Channel. While my drug- and alcohol-addled brain may not remember all the details, I can correct a couple of errors. Felt is in the space that once housed a '40s steak/chop/seafood joint. The Modern Theater was on the next block down; back then it was known as the Mayflower Theater, as it had been since the '50s. The Playboy Club was across the street from what is now Legal Sea Foods, where the Four Seasons now stands. It was in its own building, and had, as I recall, three floors. The club shut down in the late '70s, but the building, with the huge Playboy bunny logo painted on the side, remained there for years. Downtown, there was also Herbie's Ramrod Room, the Sugar Shack, Caribe Lounge, the Stuart Theater, the 1-2-3 Lounge, Hillbilly Ranch, the Carnival Lounge, the Arch Tavern, kung fu flicks at the Centre and blaxploitation at the Astor, moldy tiki bars like Bob Lee's Islander and the South Seas, and an array of winos, pimps, hos and players in the shadows. The sleek lounges of today are nice, but sometimes I miss the dank aroma of Old Crow and Pall Malls.

THE REAL SKINNY

I just finished reading the Spring Fashion issue (Feb. 21). And by reading, I mean looking at these impossibly skinny models, wearing clothes I'd never purchase, being photographed in places that I'll probably never go. Don't get me wrong, I'm all about the whole escape-from-your-boring-life-for-a-moment thing you've got going on. You know, where I pretend I could be that attractive, afford those threads and hang out in tropical places surrounded by hotties while someone takes pictures of me looking cool. But overall, I don't think it was a very accessible issue for readers. If you guys want to reach us, try this next time: Find some real kids with some original style, go shop with them, pay for whatever clothes they pick out (with your help of course), and photograph them in a Victorian in Dorchester or something.

NEW IN TOWN

Crêpe Expectations

Granted, the eclectic stretch of Brighton Ave. that houses sports bars, noodle shops and South American barbecue lacks the culinary cachet of the South End. But this Brazilian-slash–Southeast Asian–slash-Indian part of Allston has quickly made a gastronomic name for itself. The newest addition to the strip fits right in to the international mix, focusing its menu somewhere between Paris and Rio de Janeiro.

Brazil's hearty sautés and stews had already been done in this neighborhood, as had a classic rodizio of all-you-can-eat barbecue. So when business partners Ana Paula Botelho and Aleksey Levitskiy toyed with the idea of opening a place in the city (Botelho previously ran a restaurant in Lowell), they brainstormed away from conventional Brazilian fare. And when they finally settled upon a crêperie—aptly dubbed the Eats and Treats Crêperie—they honed in on a previously untapped niche there, too.

"The diameter of our crêpes is the same as traditional French crêpes, but what matters is how you fold them," explains Levitskiy, whose soft-spoken voice and unassuming demeanor echo that of his humble storefront. "Our savory crêpes are folded into squares. We saw this style when we traveled in Brazil, and we loved it there. We like it more because you don't feel like you're eating pizza; the filling is laid out throughout the crêpe, and there aren't as many folds of dough."

Sure enough, the square packets of mango-curry chicken ($6.50) and ham, egg and cheese ($5.25) look as cleanly angled as the off-white stoneware plates they cover, the former distinguished by a seemingly impromptu zig-zag squirt of brick-colored curry sauce. Forty-five (yes, 45) other savory concoctions follow suit; myriad combinations of veggies and meats are fused with anything from hearts of palm, to ricotta cheese, to barbecue sauce. Meanwhile, sweet selections (numbering more than 20) adhere to the classic French fold: First the batter disc—classically spread with Nutella ($4.25) or jam ($3.75), or stuffed with guava marmalade and mozzarella cheese ($4.25) or honey and cinnamon-dusted banana slices ($4.25)—is pulled across itself to make a half-moon, and then each corner is folded into the center. Of course, if you'd rather trade a filling here or there, or even cobble together your own crêpe, feel free; Botelho and Levitskiy have already implemented one customer's request for a build-your-own menu.

Just recently, Botelho and Levitskiy bumped up their capacity at this boxy, former hot dog joint to 19 tall barstools, installed a flat-screen, and added free WiFi. Add to that a lassi-like fruit smoothie ($2.75) or one of their many coffee concoctions brewed from house-ground beans ($1.20-$2.95), and you might do just like the mailman and grab a takeout menu as you leave. Eats and Treats Crêperie, 166 Brighton Ave., Boston (617-783-6311). —Elizabeth Bomze

INNER VIEW

Star Struck

Anthony Daniels, best known for playing C-3PO in the Star Wars trilogy, has set off to far-away galaxies once again. As narrator of the Museum of Science's planetarium show Far Far Away: The Worlds of Star Wars, he takes viewers on a tour of planets beyond our solar system that astronomers are just beginning to discover. Catch the show until April 13, or when it returns in July.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: How did you get involved with the Museum of Science show?

Anthony Daniels: C-3PO is a character that bridges the humanistic and mechanical ways of the future. And he's intelligent and chatty, of course. But I was thrilled to do it. Of all the offshoots I've done since the films, this is one of my favorites.

IB: Is there anything about the film that surprised you?

AD: Doing this made me realize how little I know about the real stars. I was appalled. But my favorite parts were the scenes going deep into space. The quietness and magical sense to it is humbling.

IB: Rumor has it you didn't even like science fiction when you did Star Wars.

AD: It's true. I actually asked for my money back when I saw 2001: A Space Odyssey. But that's changed.

IB: George Lucas liked the fact that you could mime when he cast you. What's your best move from the trilogy?

AD: Good question. Nobody has ever asked me that before. But it's true. George did need somebody who could move, especially in that costume. That was the key to C-3PO: acting through movements, because you couldn't see my face. In The Return of the Jedi, when I get pissed off at Han Solo because he keeps interrupting me with the Ewoks or when I'm afraid because my body's pulled apart, you could see my emotions through my movements.

IB: So, does that mean you've mastered the "C-3PO" on the dance floor?

AD: People call it that? Cool. I might have to try it.

IB: What ever happened to Kellogg's C-3PO cereal? It was so good.

AD: No it wasn't. The box was beautiful, though. I have one box, and someday, I will climb a hill, open that synthetic vanilla tasting stuff and destroy the planet. It will be painful and brief.

TASTY TIDBITS

The English Is Coming

From Olives to Oliver's... It seems that not even a fleet of successful restaurants, three best-selling cookbooks and a bevy of TV appearances is enough to keep megarestaurateur Todd English busy. We've gotten word—from English himself—that by early fall he'll be adding yet another notch to his culinary belt with the opening of Oliver's, a casual burger bar in Post Office Square. "When I called to tell my mother about the idea, she pulled out a menu I had created for a burger bar back when I was 16," he tells us, "so obviously this is something I've been thinking about for a while." The 1,800-square-foot space, named after English's son, will focus predominantly on beef burgers—with maybe one other lighter burger option—along with a selection of shakes, sides (like fries and specialty onion rings), wines by the glass and microbrews. "We're not going to go crazy here with $22 burgers," English says. "We're going to keep it really simple, with great $6–$12 burgers." English might not be going crazy over it, but that doesn't mean we won't be.

Sultan's Kadra at Tangierino

Capital Gains... With two Boston-area locations already up and flourishing in our competitive local steakhouse market, the Capital Grille is making a big move in opening its third Massachusetts location, this one in Burlington, on March 26. The 230-seat space features three private dining rooms, a chef's table where up to 10 guests can take in a customized meal prepared by executive chef Christopher Guide and, of course, the same extensive wine list and collection of hand-cut, dry-aged steaks that have made the Newbury Street and Chestnut Hill locations a hit. Wayside Commons, 10 Wayside Road, Burlington (781-505-4130).

Capital Grille's porterhouse steak

More Moroccan... If there's one drawback to running a successful restaurant, it's finding the space to accommodate an ever-growing customer base. Hamed Naamad, manager of Tangierino in Charlestown, is familiar with the problem. "People sometimes have to wait for an hour," he says. "And sometimes they don't even get in." That's why the Moroccan spot is expanding its Main Street location into the commercial space next door, and in three to four months Tangierino will nearly double its seating. The restaurant will also extend its hours until 1 am, add a new bar area and move its popular hookah lounge to the basement. 83 Main St., Charlestown (617-242-6009). www.tangierino.com.

Daisy Fish from Szechuan Bay

Szechuan Central... In early March, Somerville's Teele Square added a new Asian option to its dining scene with Szechuan Bay, an authentic Chinese Szechuan restaurant. Owners renovated the Broadway space that formerly housed YumYum Chinese Cuisine to create a 45-seat spot that features fare from accomplished Chinese chef Liu Pei Fen, whose specialties include Daisy Fish—grilled bass presented in the shape of a flower—and three-pepper chicken, which consists of chicken cooked in a special spicy chili sauce. Entrées top off at about $15. 1295 Broadway, Somerville (617-628-0018). www.sichuanbay.com.

All Lit Up

You're a woman conflicted. You love trendy, inexpensive clothes, but you're drawn to the quieter, more civilized experience of the upscale boutiques. Unfortunately, however, your wallet simply can't support Newbury Street labels. Until now. Lit on Newbury, a charming boutique between Fairfield and Exeter, offers absolutely affordable, up-to-the-minute pieces in an intimate, whimsical atmosphere. The décor features crystal chandeliers, faux-flocked wallpaper, beaded hangers and curtains in sapphire organza. And the inventory? It's fun! For accessories, there are patterned iPod and cell phone holders, lace hosiery, spangly earrings and roomy satchels. Cargo pants sell for about $60; a cotton wrap dress with hoodie for $78; and sexy summer tops and witty tees for $24. There's an adorable white cotton summer dress with silver thread detail for $49 and a fancy silk dress dress with gold threads for $129. They've also got jeans by Miss Me for under $100. "There's nothing in here over $150," explains Lisa Chang, one of the owners. This is the little shop where you can act like an heiress. Lit on Newbury, 223 Newbury St., Boston (617-421-8637). www.litboutique.com. —Marni Elyse Katz

Wine Not?... It's common knowledge that a little wine can be good for the heart. But for the skin—who knew? In conjunction with the annual Boston Wine Festival (through mid-April), the Spa at Rowes Wharf is offering two services using chardonnay-infused products. The chardonnay massage ($120) features a full-body rub down using Olavie chardonnay oil, said to nourish dull skin and sore muscles. The chardonnay body wrap ($140) includes an all-natural scrub for exfoliation, followed by a warm Vichy shower, and topped off with a chardonnay butter massage that hydrates skin and fights off free radicals. Don't worry, you won't leave smelling like you've been on a bender; the products have a fruity aroma, not a boozy one. Boston Harbor Hotel, 70 Rowes Wharf, Boston (617-439-3914). www.thesparoweswharf.com.

A New Lease on Life... Film buffs, you may now stop wringing your hands. The announcement made more than a year ago that the Brattle Theatre might be forced to close its doors is null and void. The Brattle Film Foundation board has declared the "Preserve the Brattle Legacy" campaign a success. Having raised more than $400,000 for the foundation from businesses, other foundations and individual donors as well as at special events, the beloved slice of Cambridge history has extended its lease for an additional two years. So the revivals will continue—at least until February 2009. www.brattlefilm.org.

BY EZRA DYER

ALBANIA MANIA

You might not know this, but I'm huge there.

A few weeks ago, I got an e-mail from a guy named Alfred asking if it'd be okay to translate my column into Albanian for his Web site. Since I'm all for the sharing of cultures and for hot Albanian chicks being able to read my column, I agreed. Also, as Alfred pointed out, he could've done it without asking and I'd never have known. So there's that.

I immediately set out to learn more about Albania. And by "more" I mean "anything." So I looked it up in the CIA World Factbook, where I gleaned some useful information. For starters, Albania is on the Adriatic Sea just across from Italy and north of Greece. I've been to Italy and Greece, and from those trips I can draw a few conclusions about Albania: The people there enjoy smoking and riding mopeds, often simultaneously. I'd ask Alfred if I'm on target with that, but he's busy trying to kick-start his Vespa while lighting a Camel. As to whether Albanian beaches are similar to their Greek and Italian counterparts vis à vis toplessness, that'll require a fact-finding mission.

In terms of size, the CIA says that Albania is "slightly smaller than Maryland." Unfortunately, that wasn't much help, because like many Americans, I'm not at all familiar with Maryland. In local terms, though, Albania is bigger than Fenway Park but smaller than Canada.

The Albanian flag features a two-headed eagle shooting laser beams out of its beaks. OK, I embellished that. There are no laser beams, but there is a two-headed eagle, which gives me major flag envy, as well as an idea for a referendum in the next election: Stars and stripes, meet "stars and stripes and three-headed eagle clutching guns in its talons." Seriously, why should our flag be less badass than it could be just because Betsy Ross didn't know how to sew a three-headed eagle with talon guns?

With the basic facts under my hat—climate, population, distribution of family income as measured by the Gini Index—I looked up some Albanian proverbs to see if I could work a few of them into future columns. Here's one, which I'm quoting word-for-word: "A man who falls off a ladder always hits the ground and hurts himself, but a man who walks under a ladder only hurts himself if the man on the ladder is falling off at that moment, or dropping something, which would seem to suggest that it is bad luck to go up a ladder and good luck to walk under it." In America, this sentiment is roughly equivalent to, "You can't make an omelet without going to the grocery store, buying eggs, getting out a bowl and a whisk, taking the eggs out of the package and breaking them, then adding cheese and possibly some ham and vegetables and cooking the mixture over medium-high heat for four to six minutes." You see, Albanians are specific in their proverbs.

My research continued on Tripadvisor.com, which informed me that "taxis are quite expensive," and "new roads are always springing up throughout the country." And get this: The capital city has a mayor who likes to put his stamp on the local architecture. His theme is bright, pastel-colored buildings. Expensive taxis, lots of construction, a local mayor with a grandiose architectural agenda—from what I can tell, Albania is pretty much Boston with different currency and a better basketball team.

Of course, just because I'm writing for an Albanian audience now doesn't mean I'm going to completely change my approach to this column. I'm not going to shamelessly pander to my Albanian fans, because that would be sillier than driving from Tirana to Durres via Pogradec. It'd be like buying a 100-lek parking pass at Mother Teresa Airport when you know you're going to leave your car there overnight. Right?

SHAMELESSLY PANDERING TO MY ALBANIAN FANS WOULD BE SILLIER THAN DRIVING FROM TIRANA TO DURRES VIA POGRADEC

I don't envy Alfred's task of translating this column, because so much of what I write barely makes sense in English. For instance, will Albanians understand my impulse when I'm at Starbucks to dump all my coffee into the trash and fill my cup with milk from the carafe? I mean, you're already dumping part of your coffee into the trash and replacing it with milk. One of these days, I'll take that scenario to its logical conclusion. Maybe then you could even go back to the counter and ask them to dump out some of the milk and add coffee. You feel me on that, don't you, Boston? No? What about Albania?

OK, anyone out there fluent in Mandarin? iB

BEND IT LIKE BECKETT

Will an older, wiser Josh Beckett learn that power alone can't stop American League hitters?

Playing catch with Josh Beckett, I couldn't help but ask if the avid hunter caught anything over the off-season. He was very quick to point out, in his best Southern drawl, "We don't catch 'em. We kill 'em."

Beckett is who he is: a hard-throwing righty who's still a mystery. He can be as hard to deal with as Carl Everett (well, maybe not that bad), but Beckett also told me he's going to make an effort to be more likable this year.

I immediately thought, "Just maybe this kid is going to learn the way things work around here."

Last season was a humbling one for the cocky Beckett. Have you heard the story that he wore a jacket in high school with the word "phenom" on it? We didn't see that one last season.

In Beckett's debut year with the Sox, getting a ticket in the bleachers for one of his starts meant that you had a decent chance of walking away with a souvenir (Beckett gave up a career-worst 36 home runs in 2006).

Why? How? With that stuff?

One problem that's very easy to identify: Even if you throw the ball 200 miles per hour, if it's up in the zone, major league hitters will find a way to make your outing a short one. For starters, it's pretty much impossible to rear back and fire—especially in the American League, where the lineups are stacked one through nine. Beckett found out very quickly that Detroit and Texas are nothing like Milwaukee and Houston. The boys in the junior circuit can hit.

His alleged safety net was the best game-caller in baseball. Even a 26-year-old know-it-all would be bright enough to rely on captain Jason Varitek—right?

Nope. Beckett was so stubborn about his A-plus heater that when Varitek put down anything other than a single index finger, the universal sign for a fastball, Beckett often shook his head.

Needless to say, the first half of the season was a learning experience. Beckett just couldn't figure out that he had to trust Varitek. And he couldn't wait to tell me how the second half of last season wasn't so much about growing up but learning the importance of his catcher. The sooner he learned that, the sooner the agony of defeat—or shall I say, the agony of the ball flying out of the park at an alarming rate—would cease.

The reality is that if Beckett weren't in Boston, he'd likely be the ace of any team in baseball. And he knows it. At age 27, he already has three Opening Day starts under his belt. Heck, he was starting an opener when he was 22.

Boston, though, is a different animal. He finds himself, at least on paper, as the ace-in-waiting. This season is the time for Beckett to turn that promise into productivity. The key is that he's done it before, under the bright lights of the playoffs and World Series. And he has come through.

He's lain the physical groundwork for a successful season. The one thing that has never been an issue with Beckett is his work-out ethic. When you compare Beckett to the Sox' current ace, Curt Schilling, whose arm is always prepared while his belly looks more like a sumo wrestler's, you understand Beckett does get it.

After watching Beckett's second go-round here in Fort Myers, I'm ready to make a prediction. Let me be the first to say: Beckett is going to chase 20 wins this season.

THE SECOND HALF OF LAST SEASON WAS ABOUT LEARNING THE IMPORTANCE OF JASON VARITEK

With a career that features a World Series MVP Award at the age of 23, he now has the contract and security that go along with being a superstar. He's had a season to learn the ropes of the American League and the Boston playing environment. His problems, both mental and physical (his nagging blisters), are behind him. And hopefully so is last season.

Beckett retains a certain arrogance, but the only people having difficulty with him now should be the hitters in the American League East.

With Varitek's help, we're in for a treat this season. I'm not saying it'll be unexpected—hell, he makes $10 million per year—but I believe he's going to mature on and off the mound.

It was nice having a catch with you, Josh. IB

Bean Break

Want to see things more clearly? Try getting out of town for a while.

Boston's a Calvinist town, no matter what your background. People are more reticent here. We're not comfortable with people who make a splash. Even though we have our share of trophy houses and apartments, most of us are quick to judge the outrageous display of new wealth—and judge this display in disapproving terms. My wife and I were recently in Cabo San Lucas, where on our first day at the hotel, another couple walked up to us and said, "Hi, we're the Perkins: Sam and Molly, from Chicago. Where are you folks from?" We chatted for a few minutes, the conversation trailed off and the Perkins walked away. "Why were they talking to us?" I asked my wife.

"They're from Chicago," she said. "Guess they don't know that good fences make good neighbors."

Does friendliness make Bostonians nervous? Do we think that Midwesterners are going to force us to drink the beer that made Milwaukee famous? Or sing the Michigan fight song? Or vote pro-life?

I want to push for getting away from Boston for an occasional breather—a break from our attitudes, a chance to learn without going back to school. Companies should have a sabbatical policy for key employees: Every five years, there should be a three- to six-month sabbatical with pay, where the mandate is to travel, read and open your eyes and ears to experience. And think. The danger, of course, is that in retrospect, we might end up doing what we just took a sabbatical from.

I suppose I'm railing against the loss of time to reflect. Americans love to talk about themselves. And, if we don't have friends to explore our favorite subject, we'll pay for it on the psychiatrist's couch. I've always believed that if I didn't see a shrink professionally, I should have a psychiatrist friend or two with whom to swap ideas and discuss the current state of the American psyche. I had a great psychiatrist friend, David Viscott, who had been the mascot of the Newton High football team and believed, when he dressed as a tiger at games, that he "was actually a tiger, and could do super tiger feats." He could also seemingly diagnose any illness, emotional or physical, after brief discussions about family and personal medical history. He wrote a novel about interning at Bridgewater State and then a best seller, The Making of a Psychiatrist, that's one of the finest descriptions of his profession, written with warmth, common sense and humor. "Be happy in your work," he told me. "Do something—auto repair or heart repair—that allows you to express whatever your natural talent is. Anything else is a mistake." He added that "when Mozart wrote Don Giovanni, he also wrote A Little Night Music to amuse himself. You should always cultivate a second dimension." After a large book tour, he called me, feeling low. "I see so many needy people," he said, "all looking for practical solutions, not drugs. And I'm vilified by the medical community here. They think I'm a wild hose out of control, a rebel. I should be shining, not dumped on."

"You want show biz," I told him. "You want a hand-held mike, and you'll never get that in Boston. You'll always be an ugly duckling here, not a swan. But if I've ever met a Beverly Hills shrink, it's you. You're just living in the wrong place."

Dr. Viscott moved to L.A. long before Dr. Phil and became a pop-psychiatry star, emphasizing short-term solutions to emotional and personal problems through TV, radio shows and many practical books. "I'm a swan now!" he yelled to me over the phone.

In the last few weeks I was in L.A. again, not searching for the truth, but searching for ideas and impressions. Part of this is for my money-management process, Peter Lynch's "eyes and ears" theory. Part of it is to see what I'm missing by being locked in the Boston mode. When I'm feeling this way, I almost always call my friend "Fenway Mike," who's spent a lifetime reinventing himself. Fenway Mike was also in L.A., renting there to test those waters while keeping his home address in Boston. "You can knock your head against the wall in Boston. I'm originally a little hick from Maine, and I like to ask questions. The questions I got asked trying to break into Boston social and business communities were: 'What parish did you grow up in?' Or 'What temple did you get bar mitzvahed in?' Or, from the WASPs, 'Where did you go to school?' They meant high school, not college. It was assumed you went to Harvard.

"In L.A., no one cares about this stuff. You can be a blank. Just show me what you got—what's your dream or your idea. It's free here, not constipated. You think you don't fit in at home, take a trip, shift the monkey to someone else's back."

I said, "You should have a little talk with John Kerry." IB

ELIZABETH BANKS

BY JONATHAN SOROFF PHOTOGRAPH BY GREG HENRY/LAMOINE PHOTO GROUP

Stunning blonde leading lady Elizabeth Banks was born and raised in Pittsfield, where she was an equestrienne and attended Pittsfield High School. She graduated magna cum laude from the University of Pennsylvania and earned a graduate degree from the American Conservatory Theater. Her extensive theater credits include productions of Hurlyburly, Bethlehem, A Midsummer Night's Dream, A Woman of No Importance and Uncle Vanya, as well as the Guthrie Theater's production of Summer and Smoke. On TV, she can be seen in a recurring role on NBC's Scrubs, and she'll appear this year in the CBS miniseries Comanche Moon, a prequel to Lonesome Dove. Her numerous screen roles include starring opposite Mark Wahlberg in Invincible, playing the bookstore employee who seduces Steve Carrell in The 40-Year-Old Virgin and as the benighted wife in the horror hit Slither. Other film credits include Steven Spielberg's Catch Me If You Can, Shaft and Wet Hot American Summer. She'll be seen this summer reprising her role as Betty Brant in Spider-Man 3, and she has wrapped production on Fred Claus opposite Vince Vaughn and Definitely, Maybe opposite Ryan Reynolds. She lives in Los Angeles with her husband.

Jonathan Soroff: First of all, is Pittsfield the armpit of Massachusetts?

Elizabeth Banks: [Laughs.] My friends and I do refer to it as "The Pitts," but no. I think the armpit of Massachusetts must be someplace like Allston or Revere.

JS: They'll be loving you there. So you can do a Boston accent. Why weren't you cast in The Departed*?*

EB: Y'know, I don't know. I was actually talking to hometown hero Mark Wahlberg at the Oscars after-party, and he was very gracious in his loss, but I thought he was fantastic in that movie. He's also a doll.

JS: So you were Pittsfield's Harvest Queen?

EB: We have a Harvest Dance, or at least we did, and a Valentine's Dance and a prom, and there's a king and queen for each event, and very few people have ever had the triple crown. I did not, but I was the Harvest Queen and the Valentine's Queen.

JS: Do you still have the jewels?

EB: No, but one other thing I'd like to point out: I made my own dress to wear to the Harvest Dance. It was strapless, long and white, with a red sash.

JS: So when you're nominated for an Oscar, will you be making your own dress to wear to the ceremony?

EB: [Laughs.] Just maybe for the story.

JS: OK, you have an Ivy League degree, magna cum laude. Do you ever wonder what you're doing starring in all these comic book movies?

EB: No. A lot of great scholars have studied the comics and consider them to be of great importance to our society. They're a testament to something. I'm not exactly sure what. I'm in a lot of comic book stuff, and I'm less embarrassed by that than I am about, say, masturbating in the bathtub. That's when I'm like, "Here's where that degree comes in! That's why I spent all that money."

JS: Wow! Our readers will love knowing that. So who's the best kisser: Mark Wahlberg, Leonardo DiCaprio or Ryan Reynolds?

EB: Boring question! I get asked that by everyone, 'cause I kiss a lot of fun guys.

JS: You're just trying to avoid the question.

EB: Well, here's what they'd all want me to say: They're very masculine and strong; their sexual prowess is incredible; they have very soft lips, and they're very tender.

JS: Do you find Zach Braff sexy?

EB: I do. He's talented and funny, and anyone who can make me laugh is very sexy. He's very playful. He's fun to make out with. We have a very playful relationship in real life, so we have a lot of fun together. He's very touchy. He has a hard time keeping his hands to himself.

JS: So do I smell a sexual harassment suit?

EB: Oh, no. I'm a married woman, so if some guy wants to spend the afternoon pawing at my ass, as long as he's somewhat respectful about it… [Laughs.] That opportunity won't happen forever, y'know. I might as well take it when it comes.

JS: Your husband must be very tolerant. So do the comparisons to Sharon Stone ever get tired?

EB: Are you kidding? I'll take it! I think she's one of the most beautiful women in Hollywood. That's my type. My ideal beauties are all the blondes.

JS: Interesting, because your hair color has gone from red to brown to blonde. Do blondes have more fun?

EB: Yes, they do.

JS: Do you think the fact that you look so different from movie to movie has an effect on your career?

EB: People warn you against doing that, and I think there's a lot to be said for creating a brand in this business. Certainly the advice I get is to stick to one color. I prefer to be blonde. It fits my personality. But hair is very important to character, so I don't mind changing my hair for a role.

JS: Would you ever do a nude scene?

EB: Sure. I'm not big on saying "never." I think it gets you in trouble. I have no idea where life's going to take me.

JS: Ever seen Tobey Maguire naked?

EB: No. But topless. He takes good care of himself.

"I WAS INTO PETER PARKER (THE ANIMATED VERSION), AND I WAS ALSO INTO HAN SOLO. HE WAS SNARKY. HE WAS FUNNY. I LOVED HIM."

JS: Ever regret Wet Hot American Summer*?*

EB: It's one of my favorite things I ever did. I have friends for life from that film, and so many great talents were in it before they were known. Amy Poehler, Paul Rudd. We had the best time making it. I never went to camp, so I got to go to summer camp with alcohol.

JS: Your best quote regarding making Slither was, "I didn't even mind having KY Jelly smeared all over me."

EB: [Laughs.] Yeah, that's true. It's such a good movie. One of my favorites. The reason I know that was a great moviemaking experience is that we shot that in the winter in Vancouver in the freezing cold at night and I still think it was the most fun I ever had making a movie.

JS: How'd you perfect your scream for that role?

EB: Oh, man, it was a lot of screaming. I don't actually know what it would be like to have a giant slug attacking me, but I just imagined that, and I mimicked all the great horror screams I could remember. I did a lot of JoBeth Williams in Poltergeist.

JS: Steve Carrell?

EB: Another lovely Masshole, and a late-blooming comic genius. He does sweet silly better than anyone.

JS: Who was your superhero crush growing up?

EB: Christopher Reeve in Superman. I was into Peter Parker (the animated version), and I was also really into Han Solo. He was snarky. He was funny. I loved him.

JS: If you could have one super power, what would it be and why?

EB: I'd be able to shit gold. Then I could just hand out money to war-torn countries in Africa and say, "Take care of it."

JS: You've acted opposite Madonna. Can she act?

EB: [Laughs.] She can, actually. She wants it badly, and she's very committed to it, and that goes a long way. I'll also say this: We never waited a single minute for her to be on set. She is the most un-diva-like, reliable, totally professional actress.

JS: What's your dream role?

EB: It used to be Juliet, but I'm a little old for that, so now it's Lady Macbeth.

JS: One role you wanted but never got?

EB: You can never say. There's a ton of them! Everything Kate Winslet's ever done, I would've loved to have done.

JS: Any roles you regret?

EB: OK, maybe one. I did this movie called Surrender Dorothy when I was in college, and it was… the opposite of good. But at the same time, it was a really good learning experience

JS: Last question: Stupidest line you ever had to deliver?

EB: They are legion. You try explaining how the virus from outer space ended up infecting human beings and is now an all-seeing god on earth, and make it sound coherent. But honestly, it's usually the simple ones, like, "Don't leave town."

JS: OK, I won't.

EB: Oh, I guess I did that better than I thought. IB

BOSTON'S GOT A SMORGASBORD OF DECADENT DELIGHTS FOR THE NOT-SO-FRUGAL GOURMET

by JOLYON HELTERMAN photographs by ANTHONY TIEUL

WHEN IT COMES TO HEDONISTIC SPENDING, FOODIES REALLY TAKE the cake. Clothes-hounds, car buffs, stiletto-philes, jewelry junkies... they may act as though they're being all frivolous and naughty by cashing in a paycheck (or several) to feed their demons. But truth be told, that Fendi purse will still be around tomorrow. That vintage Maserati, those strapping Jimmy Choos, that Cartier pavé-diamond bracelet will retain value (not to mention status-blaring cachet) for months, even years to come. Sort of like—what's the word—an investment? Huh. Not so frivolous after all. $$$ With food splurges, it's a different story. Drop some serious buckage on a bottle of premier cru Bordeaux or a plate of Wagyu and shaved truffles, and all you'll have to show for it the next morning is a heavy head (and belly) and a light wallet. Much closer to the spirit of pure hedonism—along the same lines (so to speak) as cocaine binges and strings-free one-night stands—food splurges are solely about the pleasure of the moment. The only thing you're investing in is a mouthful of delicious memories and, if you're lucky, some decadent tales to tell. $$$ So if you're planning to spend hard-earned cash on caviar, Kobe or cognac, you'd better make the most of the experience while it's happening. With that in mind, here are four of the city's most distinctive—and luxurious—gourmet splurges. Give them a try, and you're guaranteed to leave with a few stories you can dine out on for years.

LOOKING SHARP.
Needlefish sashimi with watermelon sprouts, daikon radish and shiso vinaigrette, part of a $420 tasting at Clio. Facing page, from top: Clio's Uni Spoon, with slow-poached quail egg, brioche bread crumbs, edible goldleaf and flash-chilled olive oil; Clio's $120 Wagyu beef supplement; a $900 swallow of rare vintage cognac from the Federalist

LIVING LARGE

1 THE ULTIMATE SURF 'N' TURF

The burnished wood, the warm lighting, the tables of blazer-clad youngsters making awkward small talk with the boss over expense-account Maker's-and-Cokes... yup, it's just another dinner service at Morton's, the Steakhouse. Or so it would appear. As our waiter, Paul Colbert, wheels the carnivorous counterpart to a dessert cart up to the table, only the steely glint in my eyes hints at the extraordinary carnage to follow.

The affable Colbert does a fine job with the Morton's signature presenting-of-the-meats ritual. But this evening, it's all I can do to muster polite interest. For just beyond the Chicago-style bone-in rib-eye ($45), and to the left of the double-rib lamb chops ($39), lies the beast I've come to vanquish: the 48-ounce prime porterhouse steak ($88).

For those who can't quite wrap their heads around the concept of that much beef, it's like 12 Quarter Pounders, minus the buns and toppings. Although the menu says the steak can be sliced for two, I'm prepared to tackle the whole thing. Until Colbert announces that, well, it's been done—and often. "One guy, skinnier than me, ate every bit of it," recalls the lanky Colbert. "He was even gnawing the bone."

Quicker than you can say "surf and turf war," I raise the stakes. So what if there are starving packs of Atkins-addled trust-fund kids roaming the streets, downing $88 steaks in a single bound? Dismissing the mundane "regular lobster tail" (8 ounces, $39); I supplement my steak with the "jumbo," a hulking, 14-ounce sea monster that costs $53.

When the lobster arrives, it's full speed ahead. The accompanying melted butter, served in a veritable trough, wets the charred, slightly desiccated exterior, beneath which hides sweet, moist, beautifully succulent meat. A squeeze of lemon brightens the whole mess with a touch of acidity, cutting through the nutty, buttery richness. This is heaven. Within minutes, the lobster tail is but a shell of its former self.

Minutes later, Colbert lowers the steak onto the table. Shaped like the state of South Carolina (and nearly as big), the unwieldy beast easily dwarfs the sprig or two of watercress garnish—clearly meant as a joke. But the first bite is gorgeous: The dark brown exterior, a jarringly salty crust courtesy of the kitchen's infernal, 800-degree broilers, gives way to a warm, pink, beefy expanse of well-marbled flesh—the ideal contrast, both in flavor and in texture.

And that's just the strip side. Steak connoisseurs like to debate the relative merits of the filet mignon versus the New York strip—the first for its incomparably tender texture, the second for its superior beefy taste. With the porterhouse, you get the best of both worlds: filet on one side of the bone, strip on the other. Turning my attentions to the filet side, the contrast is even more pronounced. Charred, salty crust once again, then... nothing but buttery tenderness.

Colbert checks my progress frequently, offering words of encouragement. But soon the inevitable outcome is clear. Beast, 1; Me, 0. Throwing in the napkin, I rise from the table, vanquished but satisfied. Morton's, the Steakhouse, 699 Boylston St., Boston (617-266-5858). www.mortons.com.

2 ADVENTURES IN DEGUSTATION

"I've got a woodcock in the back!" exclaims William Kovel, breathless with excitement. But the setting isn't some wildlife refuge out in the Berkshires (nor, for that matter, the Fenway Fens). We're at the opulent dining room of the Four Seasons' Aujourd'hui, where Kovel is the wildly talented chef. Before landing the gig, Kovel—a former Radius sous chef—dropped everything to spend a year in a London restaurant learning how to gut, pluck and prepare exotic game birds. For instance: the woodcock.

It can be hard to slip the likes of squab heart and partridge onto a menu at a venerable venue like Aujourd'hui, where regulars tend to prefer familiar (albeit impeccably executed) classics. Enter Table 76, the eight-seat chef's table where Kovel and his cohorts can indulge their yen for culinary adventurism, unencumbered by persnickety palates. The rules are simple: No lists of "dislikes" (only legitimate food allergies), and the kitchen needs 72 hours' notice, to give Kovel and company time to cull the markets for inspiration. For $250 per person, you get at least four wine-paired courses plus dessert and coffee. An extra $310 buys 2.1 ounces of Sevruga caviar, distributed throughout the tasting.

With five unfinicky friends in tow, I'm escorted to Table 76, a number with no significance beyond its fortuitous location: a back corner defined by two wall-length cabinets of wine, just a few feet from the kitchen. Those proximities give diners a chance to interact with Kovel and sommelier Brick Loomis throughout the meal. The perfect tag team, our hosts strike such a comfortable rapport with our party, it feels like hanging out with buddies—if your buddies happen to be food and wine prodigies at the top of their game, that is. When the decadence of "bacon foam" (part of a warmed egg yolk, smoked salmon and caviar course) elicits laughter from the entire party—including the chef—the relaxed tenor of the evening is locked in.

"This is Berkshire pork belly confit, cured for a day and a half in herb salt, then cooked 3-4 hours," Kovel begins, explaining the souped-up take on shrimp and bacon before us. "We sauté langoustines in butter, use the shells to make a beautiful jeu, truffle the jeu out, then do a bit of Fuji apple to provide acidity and crispness." Before the oyster course, Kovel brings out slices of hard-to-find bergamot oranges (the oils of which give Earl Grey tea its distinctive perfume) for each of us to smell and taste; by the time the warmed oysters with bergamot zest and seaweed salad arrive, we all feel like seasoned experts.

The rest of the evening is a wine-tinged dream. Highlights: salsify soup with black-truffle tapioca and marcona almonds; poached turbot with Chinese broccoli and cilantro-ginger-curry broth; and veal tenderloin with sweetbreads, celery root purée, mizuna (a delicate Japanese green) and orange sauce. For dessert, we try foie-gras beignets with quince caramel sauce (yes, that's goose-liver doughnuts) and a more conventional lemon tart.

And what of the woodcock? None shows up this evening, though Kovel is more than happy to describe the dish. "It's stronger than squab, lighter than grouse," he begins. So far, so good. "We roast it whole, split the head open, expose the brains, shove the beak into the thigh to truss it, then sear its liver and..." He pauses, before quickly adding, "Oh, and it's served with glazed cipollini onions and croutons fried in butter!" But the jig is up. For this our first Table 76 adventure, we've clearly been taken little beyond the bunny slope.

3 LIQUID GOLD

It's 7 pm at the Federalist, the fine-dining restaurant tucked into Beacon Hill's posh XV Beacon Hotel. Alone at the bar, I've just spent a whopping $55 on wine. But what I've bought isn't even a whole bottle—it's a single glass of Bordeaux.

Of course, this is no ordinary Bordeaux; it's a 1981 Château Haut-Brion. While 1981 was only a very good (not phenomenal) year for Bordeaux, the fact that it's from one of five top producers (a "premier cru") means it's still considered great, and a bottle sells for $375. The upshot? At $55 a glass, it's a steal.

SHELLING OUT
From left: At Aujourd'hui, Kumamoto and Indian Point oysters come with bergamot vinaigrette and seaweed salad; chef William Kovel describes his next dish at a Table 76 tasting.

The Federalist's wine list isn't very typical. Restaurants tend to offer only cheaper wines by the glass—it's too risky to pour single portions of the good stuff, when most diners blanch at paying more than $10 a glass. (The moment a bottle is uncorked, the clock starts ticking.) With a wine cellar rated among the nation's best, however, the Fed attracts enough serious wine drinkers that they're willing to take the gamble.

There's another clock ticking as well. It's not arbitrary that the Fed's pouring the 1981 vintage at bargain-cellar prices. Like a good gouda, wine gets better with age—but only to a point. When a wine reaches its peak years of drinkability, the Fed starts offering it by the glass. The staff knows now's the ideal time to enjoy a 1981 premier cru Bordeaux. As does its well-quaffed clientele.

I take a sip as bar manager Brad Fichter looks on. "Ultra-smooth" is the first word (well, pretend-word) that comes to mind. Beautiful. Unlike the younger wines I'm used to knocking back, here it's hard to pin down exactly what I'm tasting. I take another sip, hoping to muster at least a tentative "oaky?"—or anything at all, really. Fortunately, Fichter steps in: "Once it hits that prime age, the acid and the tannins and the fruit—they're all finally in balance. There's no sharp distinction between flavors. It's just very mellow, very elegant." Yeah... what he said.

The Federalist is even more revered for its cognac and Scotch holdings. As with the vintage wines, 1-ounce pours of rare whiskeys like the Strathisla 42 Year, at $110, don't come cheap. At $675 an ounce, the 1949 MacCallan is literally more precious than gold. But for connoisseurs (and curiosity seekers like me), small-portion offerings bring the opportunity to sample something this rare into the realm of the possible.

And then there's the big one. If you're feeling really flush, consider dropping $900 on a 1-ounce taste of the Antoine Hardy & Cie "Perfection." Yes, this blended cognac is very old, but that's only part of its value. During the 1870s, root-eating lice called phylloxerae destroyed nearly every grapevine in France. Dating back to the 1860s, the Perfection is the only known cognac made from pre-phylloxera grapes that's still available. If you want a chance to sample the style of cognac a 20-something Claude Monet might have enjoyed, better do it quick. There are only about 10 bottles left in the world—and the Fed owns one and a half of them.

"I've been here a year and we've sold two glasses," says Fichter. "Some corporate lawyers came in after winning a big case. They drank them out in the parking lot, with a couple of cigars." Is that even allowed? "They bought $900 cognacs."

4 EDIBLE SCULPTURE

Friday night, 5:30 pm, Clio. The city's indulgent-sia begin making their way in for the first seating of the evening—couples celebrating anniversaries, friends toasting birthdays, guests staying in the Eliot Hotel (just upstairs) popping down for a taste of chef Ken Oringer's critically acclaimed Asian-inflected haute cuisine.

This is splurge dining, no question. At $135 a person, the chef's tasting isn't something even the most committed connoisseur can enjoy on a daily basis. And that's without wine: It costs another $100 to make sure you have something appropriate to wash down every one of the 14 courses—a mix of items from Clio and Uni (Oringer's upscale sashimi bar tucked into an alcove of the same space).

Food, wine... well, that's a start. Unfortunately for me (or, rather, the IMPROPER's accounting department), the basic tasting doesn't include shaved black truffles or Wagyu beef, two of the most luxurious items in the known culinary world. Not wanting to shirk my professional responsibility—this is a luxury-dining article, after all—I close my eyes, channel my editor, then place the order, fairly confident she'd want me to have the full truffle supplement ($65) and 3 ounces (the minimum) of Wagyu beef ($120; $40 an ounce). Call it a sixth sense.

Not only does Oringer have a yen for Japanese ingredients, but his presentation reflects the sculptural quality of that cuisine as well. In short, it's edible art. Plus a little bit of science: My first course is a spoon containing a poached quail egg, crunchy brioche crumbs, edible goldleaf, and olive oil that's been quick-chilled with liquid nitrogen into a granular, flavorful cross between butter and sorbet. Next comes needlefish sashimi, another virtuosic presentation. Slices of the white-fleshed fish and crisp, clean watermelon sprouts are tossed with a tangy shiso vinaigrette, then piled high into a swirling vortex that includes the (purely decorative, if menacing) head and tail.

The toro tartare proves a strong contender for best dish of the night. The fatty—almost creamy—chopped raw fish arrives as a rectangular tableau upon which sits a succession of garnishes. Essentially, I have not one tartare but seven—savory (tuna + onions), decadent (tuna + Osetra caviar), luscious (tuna + quail egg), herbaceous (tuna + fennel frond), bracing (tuna + lime), piney (tuna + shredded mint-shiso) and pungent (tuna + nori emulsion). Snow White would feel right at home.

Several dishes later, however, I begin to worry about making it to the end of this marathon. It takes but a single bite of the black-truffle risotto to bolster my resolve. Truffles fetch upward of $500 a pound for two reasons: They're difficult to procure (the process involves roaming around Italy under cover of night with a truffle-sniffing pig or dog), and nothing compares with their funky, earthy, potent flavor. Some prefer truffles shaved onto eggs or pasta, but there's no better medium than risotto. As the short, squat rice grains simmer, they become tiny sponges, absorbing the fragrant broth as they soften and expand. The result is a dish of soft, fluffy, mushroomy intensity.

What makes Wagyu (the general term for pampered cow, of which Kobe beef is but one) worth $40 an ounce? It basically comes down to fat distribution. A Wagyu steak is riddled with a matrix of fat—as wispy and thin as a spider web. When the beef is heated, those lines of fat melt away, flavoring the meat while making it tender enough to cut with a fork. As grand as the presentation is—the slices are seared tableside, then served with a rich mushroom broth and dipping sauces—this is the one dish that has nothing to do with Oringer's genius. It's the beef, pure and simple. Meanwhile, an overwrought food-writing cliché reconnects with its roots, as the buttery morsels quite literally melt in my mouth.

The dessert courses? I'll just have to try them next time.

What is it about really gorgeous shoes that makes a woman's heart beat faster? by CARMEN NOBEL shoes: a love story

IF YOU ASK KARYN MARTIN ABOUT HER FAVORITE SHOES, YOU MIGHT WANT TO HAVE SOME KLEENEX AT THE READY. ❤ "They were a pair of hot-pink Ralph Lauren pumps with suede trim and a suede bow," says Martin, a PR account executive from West Roxbury. She's gushing, but then her tale takes a woeful turn. "I came home one day to find that my puppy had eaten the heel off one of them," she says. "I screamed in disbelief and cradled them like a wounded child." ❤ That was last spring, and the doomed shoes are still sitting in Martin's closet. "I can't bring myself to get rid of them," she says. "I bought a pair of red Ralph Lauren pumps that I thought might fill the void, but they weren't like the pink ones. I couldn't find another pair. I keep hoping I'll find a brilliant cobbler. Do you know of a good cobbler?"

"With luxury shoes, once you buy a pair, you can't stop. Nothing else fits right."

Caroline Gathembe, NU student

Martin is a self-described shoe lover. She keeps about 80 pairs in a dedicated shoe closet, she plans her outfits from the ground up, she makes special trips to Jimmy Choo "just to pat the shoes," and her office cube is decorated with Stuart Weitzman advertisements.

She's hardly alone in her devotion. Shoe fiends are everywhere. Surely you've seen them out and about in Boston, braving our cobblestone roads and pothole-pocked sidewalks in their five-inch Christian Louboutin slingbacks, flashing the designer's signature red leather soles. In a city filled with ice, slush, snow and pragmatism, true shoe love faces a lot of adversity. So why does high-end footwear inspire such devotion?

Born and Bred

Some women chalk their love up to a shoe-centric upbringing. "My father has a shoe fetish," says Ondine Brent, a style writer and directrice of Miss O's Charm School in Brookline, who maintains some 65 pairs of shoes, the vast majority of which are strappy European sandals. "When I was little, he'd massage and crack my toes so I wouldn't grow up to have ugly feet. And I'm pretty sure my mother paid for [Salvatore] Ferragamo's grandchildren to go to college."

She acknowledges that her penchant for sandals isn't suited to Boston; she was raised in Paris and Los Angeles. "There are a lot of sexy boots here because the weather calls for it, but I'm looking for the next sandal," she says. "I'm pretty foolhardy. If it's raining I'll still wear an open-toed shoe. If it's really frigid, maybe a slingback."

Alannah DiBona also has a genetic inclination for shoes, but in a more Bostonian way. Her favorite shoes are a pair of $440 Stuart Weitzman suede, knee-high boots, relatively practical in chilly Boston weather—except when it snows. The young assistant account executive now works full-time at a PR firm in Quincy. But she grew up working at Michael's Shoe, her family's store in Acton, and she still works weekends there.

Lately, DiBona has noticed a trend at the store, which historically has specialized in "comfortable shoes" such as Danskos and Uggs. "There's been a demand in the last few years for higher-end stuff," she says. "People are now going in there and asking for Cole Haan and Stuart Weitzman."

Behind that demand, according to several area shoe vendors, lies a now-defunct HBO series, whose lead character, Carrie Bradshaw could've afforded a down payment on a condo if she hadn't spent so much money on Manolo Blahnik and Jimmy Choo heels.

Summer Soles

Eight luxurious shoes for a luxurious spring, and where to buy them.

1. Jimmy Choo Texas, Jimmy Choo, $630. A sleek combination of black suede and metallic leather, these four-inch-heeled dress sandals are a winner. Jennifer Lopez wore them to the Golden Globes. And it takes a pretty special shoe to make us notice La Lopez's feet.

2. Valentino pumps, Valentino, $690. Covered with clear crystals, these grey peep-toed pumps are light-catching, attention-grabbing and classic. They feature a three-and-four-fifths-inch covered heel and a sexy open triangle near the vamp.

3. Taryn Rose napa and suede ballerina flats, Neiman Marcus, $475. Orthopedic surgeon Taryn Rose formed her fashionable footwear company in 1997, with the educated aim of showing women that they don't have to sacrifice comfort—and health—for style. Case in point are these ergonomically designed flats, made in Italy of cream suede with zebra stripes of metallic gold-tone napa leather.

4. Valentino crystal ballerina flats, Saks Fifth Avenue, $395. A nice mix of fun, practicality and elegance, these comfortable canvas flats are generously dotted with silver-toned Swarovski crystals. They're made in Italy.

5. Jimmy Choo Kennedy, Jimmy Choo, $580. We're guessing that these sleek, patent-leather sandals, with their four-and-a-half-inch gold-metallic-framed heel, were not named after the portly Massachusetts senator. They come in a playful purple and a practical black, and the saleswomen at Jimmy Choo say they're one of the hottest shoes of the season.

6. Lanvin multistrap sandal, Barneys New York, $1,015. "These'll get you noticed, for sure," says a saleswoman as a customer teeters around Barneys in these black patent leather beauties with a wooden platform and five-inch cone heel. They're made, with love, in France.

7. Manolo Blahnik Testa, Neiman Marcus, $685. These crêpe slingback pumps from Carrie Bradshaw's favorite designer will garner plenty of sex... and the city. OK, yes, that was lame, and no, we can't actually guarantee the sex. But aren't they pretty? Made in Italy, they come in pastel pink and everyday black.

8. Christian Louboutin peep-toed Mary Janes, Barneys New York, $595. Crafted in Italy, these playful patent leather Mary Janes come in black, red, beige,and green. And with a mere 2-inch heel, they're almost practical.

The Sex and the City Factor

"Sex and the City really had a lot to do with the shoe thing," says April Stern Riccio, manager of public relations for fashion presentations at Neiman Marcus in Copley Place. "Carrie was the first to admit that she had a thing for designer shoes, and now everyone admits it. We have people who collect Manolo Blahniks. They come in every week."

Down the hall at the mall, the saleswomen at Jimmy Choo concur. "People walk by all the time and are, like, 'Oh, that's Carrie Bradshaw's shoe!'" says Cassandra Wick, a sales assistant at Jimmy Choo. "At least once a day we'll hear that," says fellow sales assistant Carrie Mace.

Caroline Gathembe acknowledges that Sex and the City introduced her to designer shoes. And while her status as a co-op student at Northeastern limits her budget, the Dracut resident says that the show did her a big favor. She saves paychecks for shoes. It's not just the label that makes the difference between a $50 and a $500 pair of pumps, she insists. It's not just that Italian-made designer shoes display finer workmanship, with better lines and colors than their cheaper, made-in-wherever counterparts. It's that they feel different.

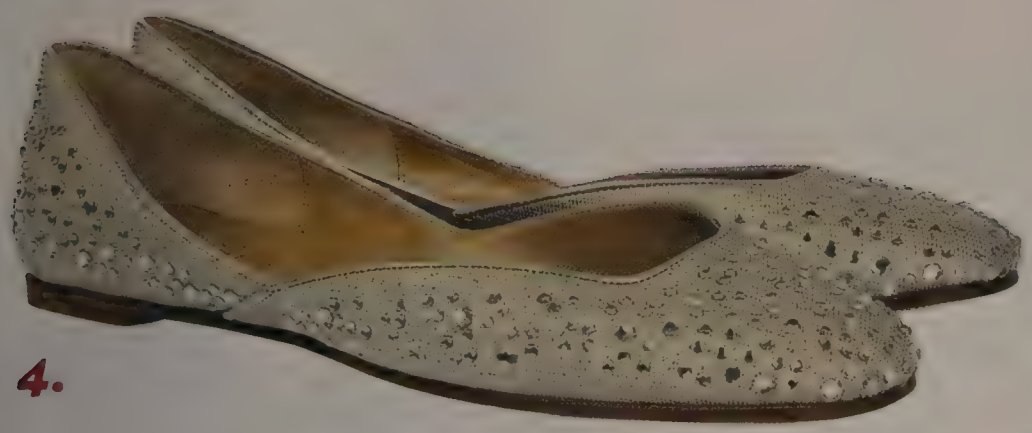
"I was always into shoes, but just regular shoes," says Gathembe, a native of Kenya whose favorite designer shoes are a pair of $575 Louis Vuitton slingbacks she bought two years ago. She's "aiming for Christian Louboutin" when she graduates.

(Salespeople at Saks Fifth Avenue, Barneys New York and Neiman Marcus all report that Louboutin has been the hot designer for the past two years. They treat his shoes with the utmost respect. During our recent visit to the Barneys in Copley Place, a saleswoman gingerly lifts a $1,500 Louboutin pump from its prominent place on the wall of the store's shoe salon. "This is Sirene," she says, her tone so reverent that we're compelled to tell the monikered shoe that we're very pleased to meet it.)

"Sex and the City introduced Manolos and Jimmy Choos," Gathembe says. "I started going out of my way to go into high-end stores to look at the shoes, and then I finally tried on a pair. You try on a designer shoe and it's soooo different from a regular shoe. The leather is softer; it bends more easily. No matter how high the stiletto is, you're still comfortable. In the beginning people would watch the show and think, 'What's the big deal? Her shoes look like any other shoes.' But then you go and try on a Nine West shoe and then try on a Manolo Blahnik shoe. And it's not the same. With luxury shoes, once you buy a pair, you can't stop. Nothing else fits right."

In the six-year run of Sex and the City, Carrie Bradshaw introduced viewers to a slew of well-heeled men: the Christians (Louboutin and Dior), Cristóbal Balenciaga, Marc Jacobs, Francisco Moschino... and, of course, Choo and Blahnik.

"Sex and the City made shoe designers into the equivalent of celebrity chefs," says Emily Rubenstein, a Newton social worker and shoe fiend who claims that her own devotion predates the show.



Indeed, celebrity mystique is strong. A few months ago, the U.S. president of Manolo Blahnik, George Malkemus, visited the shoe salon at the Copley Neiman Marcus. Women showered him with attention, vying for his affection—and this wasn't even Manolo himself. It was George. "When George was here, it was like a love affair," Stern Riccio says.

Kicking Down the Cobblestones

All swooning aside, it takes more than celebrity to persuade (per-suede?) the pragmatic women of Boston to spend up to a thousand dollars on a pair of pumps. It takes comfort. For Bostonian women, salespeople say, the shoes must feel as good as they look. And that doesn't just mean supple Italian leather. It means sole support.

"Comfort and function play a big role here," says Stern Riccio. "We're a walking city."

"I have a very expensive pair of Cole Haan loafers," says Valerie Blanchette, a writer who lives in Newton. "They're black. Tasseled. I didn't wear them for months at first because I thought they were too preppy. But I held onto them. Such quality! And now, I wear them—with jeans, my luxe cashmere pants, my skinny black pants and my bathrobe. I wear them to run down to Walgreens and to pick up a quart of milk. Why?

When you're looking to escape, your shoe size is a trusted friend: They're going to fit." Karyn Martin, public relations account executive

Because the things are so damned well-made, and they're incredibly comfortable. It hearkens back to old English ways of not caring how you look, but insisting upon utter comfort."

Comfort goes for stilettos, too, inasmuch as stilettos can be comfortable. High-end shoes often have a leather lining, which absorbs moisture and lets the foot swell, whereas cheap shoes are often unfinished on the inside. This is a key feature in Boston, which is, to say the least, a moist city.

"I tend to like Manolo Blahniks because they're comfortable for me," says Rubenstein. "At 57 I still wear a four-inch heel, and I want it to be as comfortable as possible."

And some designers have built comfort into the heel itself. Last fall, talk show host Oprah Winfrey sang the praises of Latasha, a ruched suede boot with a three-inch sole from Maine-based designer Cole Haan. Sportswear maker Nike bought Cole Haan in 1989, and today many of its high-heeled shoes, including Latasha, feature Nike Air technology in the heel. Oprah called the boots "life-changing."

"When Oprah ran that show, we ran out of Latasha in a day," says Victor Castillo, a sales associate at the Cole Haan store on Newbury Street, whose mom bought a pair even though she had sworn off high heels years before. "Now she feels both comfortable and young again," Castillo says. "And kind of hot."

Looking Good, Feeling Hot

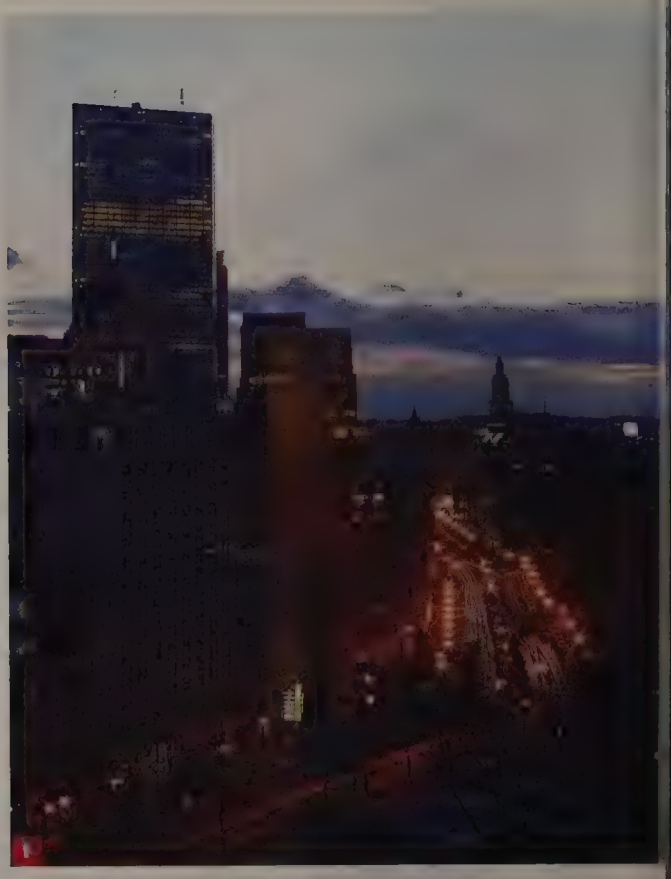
And yeah, pragmatism aside, shoe-loving women admit that feeling kind of hot is what fuels their relationship with their footwear. A pretty pair of shoes will always make them feel better. "Shoes fit you whether you're feeling fat or skinny," says Randi Pittman, assistant manager of the Copley Place Jimmy Choo.

With the exception of when she's pregnant, the size of a woman's foot remains consistent. And when it comes to size, consistency matters to a woman. "When women are looking to escape, your shoe size is a trusted friend," Martin says. "You know you can try anything on. You don't have to have any body image issues. They're going to fit!"

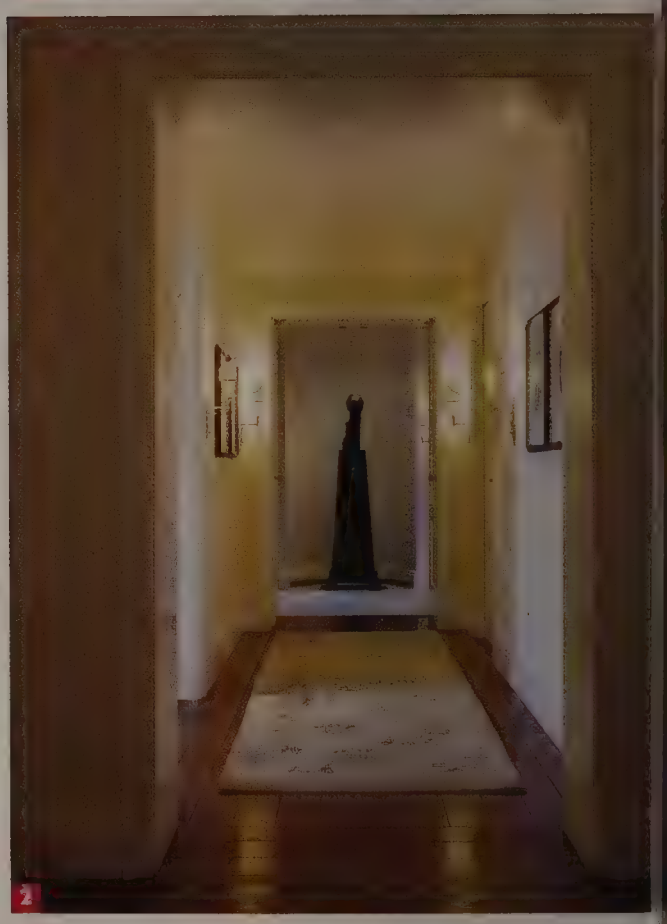
The same can't be said of a pretty swimsuit. When's the last time anyone asked if her shoes made her look fat? On the contrary: "They make your legs look longer and leaner, no matter what you're wearing," Gathembe says, adding, "You can be wearing a 10-dollar outfit, but with the right pair of shoes, the outfit looks like a million dollars."

Maria Argiriadi agrees. "You can feel a hundred times better about an outfit with the right shoes," says Argiriadi, a molecular pharmacology scientist from Wayland. She often dresses up simple cocktail dresses with a pair of black Bruno Magli peau de soie pumps. In the spring, she wears her Cole Haan ballerina flats with "everything." The same goes for her camel Valentino boots in the winter.

Some women even don nice shoes to feel pretty while they're buying more nice shoes—a challenge when trudging through winter snow to check out the new spring line. (Italy doesn't know that Boston winters last until April.)



"I call it parking-lot fashion," says Stern Riccio. "I've watched many a woman take off her boots in the parking lot and change into her shoes just to look like a million bucks when she walks into the mall. This is the first place I've worked where women dress up to shop."



For Themselves

There's a scene in The American President where Michael Douglas, playing the title role, is getting ready for his first date since his wife died. He asks the first daughter for advice. "Compliment her shoes," she says. "Girls like that."

It's true, they do, but unlike a minidress or skinny jeans (and with the notable exception of f--- me pumps) shoe lovers don't buy designer shoes to impress the guys. "I usually indulge, and on occasion he notices that I have new shoes on," says Argiriadi. "I can justify the spending because I bring home a paycheck."

Moreover, shoes are a lasting luxury. "You can think of it as not dissimilar to other expensive hobbies," says Margaret Kane Schoen, a technology-news editor with a penchant for Stuart Weitzman d'Orsay pumps. "The difference between shoes and, say, cigars, is that you can get multiple uses from shoes."

Hail to the Suite

by WYNDHAM LEWIS ☆☆☆☆☆ photographs by MICHAEL PIAZZA

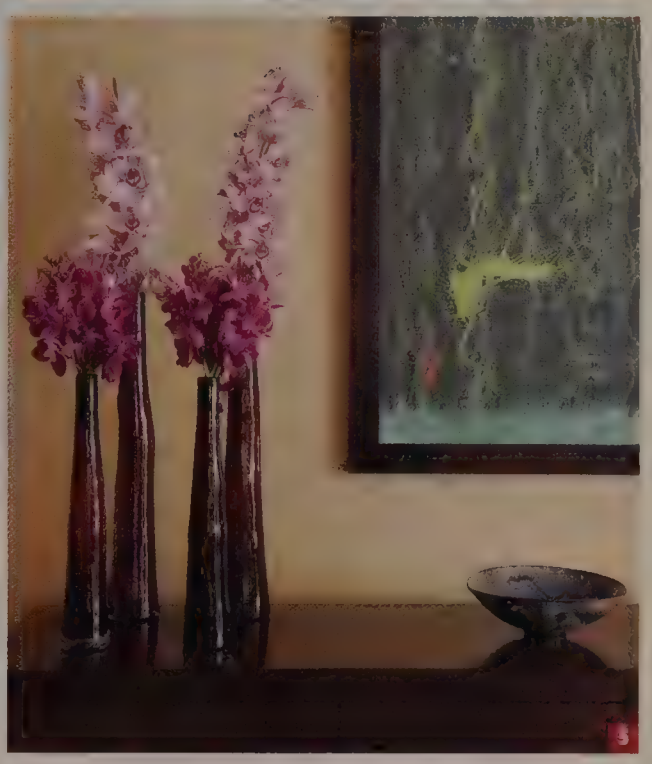
Boston and Cambridge see a steady flow of the world's rich and famous shuttling in and out of town, with a taste for the opulent and (sometimes) a desire to be seen. Our town's presidential suites bring to mind visions of Nelson Mandela penning a commencement address, JFK prepping for an audience or Keith Richards lobbing a TV set off the balcony—all of which have happened in our top-tier hotels. ☆☆☆☆☆ Since the Woodrow Wilson administration, first-class hotels have been expected to proffer living quarters fit for a commander in chief. Until recently that simply meant a large, well-appointed series of rooms with a service entrance and, well, service. But with the proliferation of new upscale hotels—we look forward to seeing you in June '08 at the Mandarin Oriental—and guests' skyrocketing expectations, Boston-area hotels find themselves in a friendly race for the finest. Bigger, better, cooler, higher-tech... that's the order of the day. Poor president Wilson would likely be lost in his titular suite at the InterContinental amid five plasma screens and an on-demand fireplace, but I'll bet we could find a handful of rock stars or a YouTube founder who'd happily show him how to roll. ☆☆☆☆☆ No doubt, Boston is a city with history to spare, and a lot of storied heads have rested on the fine and fluffed pillows of the area's most exclusive rooms. These days, each of Boston's top hotels boasts a bountiful boudoir worthy of royals and Hollywood royalty alike.

Taj: The Aristocrats' Address

Price: $4,000 per night
Size: 1,540 square feet
Bedding: 400-thread-count sheets
Recommended cocktail: Quinta do Noval 10-year-old tawny ($130 per bottle)

"Designed to feel like a Beacon Hill townhouse," the presidential suite of the Taj (formerly, Boston's original Ritz-Carlton) is basically how the rest of the world envisions Boston: overlooking the Public Garden and the Swan Boats, with the Statehouse looming in the background.

If the Lowells are still speaking only to the Lodges, the Lodges only to the Cabots, and the Cabots only to God, there's a pretty good chance that some or all of them are sitting in a room that looks like this. The classic interior is filled with Damask club chairs, English antiques and a dining room that looks naked without a silver service and a guy named Jeeves. In fact, this place is so intrinsically Boston that you might expect a complimentary Somerset Club membership and a blue blazer where the plush Ploh bathrobe currently hangs.



Four Seasons: Royalty Ready

Price: $6,000 per night
Size: 3,000–4,300 square feet
Bedding: 600-thread-count Partesi linens
Recommended cocktail: A magnum of Cristal ($1,200) or wheatgrass juice (BYO nutritionist)

If Four Seasons management set a high bar for the design of their presidential suite, they officially cleared it with room to spare. The suite is fit for a king—often literally.

[1] A view at dusk from one of 21 windows in the Ritz-Carlton presidential suite; [2] the Four Seasons suite's sweet hallway; [3] even kings have found the Four Seasons' 600-thread-count sheets fit for, well, themselves; [4] rose bath preparations at the Ritz-Carlton; [5] a library shelf in the InterContinental suite's posh office.

It's a bevy of contradictions that somehow make perfect sense: classic and modern; lavish and understated; decadent and tasteful; state-of-the-art and simple; Bostonian-, Parisian- and Ottoman-infused all at once.

Starting at the top, the comfortable/opulent living room is adorned with a platinum-leaf ceiling. Subtle/adventurous color choices really work in both the café au lait living room and the deep-gold office/entertainment area. The master suite's black-and-white toile fabric walls and tempered glass deaden any external noise, giving it a recording-studio quiet that's perfect for sleeping six floors above Boylston Street. With the flat-screen TV directly above the adjoining bathroom's tub, you can watch coverage of your speech/game/concert before calling it a night—if you haven't already caught it on one of the suite's other three 42-inch plasma sets.

The suite also boasts the hotel's only balcony, a northward-facing veranda overlooking the Public Garden. It's a perfect catwalk for celebrities of a certain stature to prowl, lest they feel underexposed.

Charles Hotel: Boudoir for the Braintrust
Price: $4,500 per night
Size: 1,500 square feet
Bedding: 300-thread-count Anichini Egyptian cotton and a handmade quilt
Recommended cocktail: 2002 Burgundy St. Vivant Dom de la Romanée-Conti ($975 per bottle)

Though unaffiliated with the nearby university, the Charles Hotel, a centerpiece of Harvard Square, might as well be part of Harvard's campus. Its presidential suite looks directly onto the Kennedy School of Government's courtyard, and a significant number of the men and women who stay there have some business at the school. Reflecting the academic-minded style of its Ivy League neighbor, this suite eschews gold-leaf opulence for a Shaker-inspired simplicity. A modern poster bed is adorned with a quilt, and the office has great views of Cambridge but a modest, efficient work space. It's more Man Booker Prize than Grammy Award, though numerous recipients of both have slept here.

Owner Dick Friedman actually knows a thing or two about presidential preferences, having played host to Bill and Hillary Clinton many summers at his Martha's Vineyard residence. Perhaps that's why visiting dignitaries and heads of state from Mikhail Gorbachev to the Dalai Lama consider this home when in town. Or maybe they just feel more at home in the people's republic?

[1] The shelves in the InterContinental suite's CEO-ready office are lined with books; [2] VIPs can catch up on their favorite shows on this 42-inch plasma-screen TV in the Four Seasons—or one of the other three TVs in the suite; [3] the Ritz-Carlton presidential suite's dining room has served numerous Hollywood hotshots.

InterContinental: Where the CEOs Sleep

Price: $6,000 per night
Size: 2,700–3,300 square feet
Bedding: 400-thread-count Egyptian cotton
Recommended cocktail: 1800 Colección Tequila ($200 a shot, neat)

The InterCon's presidential suite is aptly named, both because it looks like the home of a person who runs something and because it's about the size of the White House. Looking out from behind the desk of the suite's office, what strikes you is the scale of the place. To put it in context, the living room is 864 square feet (approximately the size of a Beacon Hill apartment big enough for you and a couple of roommates), and each of the two bedrooms has his-and-hers walk-in closets (each closet the size of a Beacon Hill studio apartment). It's no coincidence that a hotel nestled in the heart of the business district has at its heart a CEO's suite. The centerpiece office is handsomely appointed with Old World accoutrements, including an antique globe, a telescope and shelves full of leather-bound books.

It also has five flat-screen TVs and a universal remote that may or may not be able to change tomorrow's weather. If size (roughly that of your dream four-bedroom in Hingham) and distinguished taste matter, this place is for you.

The Ritz-Carlton: Hollywood Haven

Price: $4,500 per night
Size: 1,680 square feet
Bedding: 400-thread-count Egyptian cotton
Recommended cocktail: Martell L'Or Cognac ($225 per glass)

With stunning views from 21 windows overlooking the southeast corner of the Common, this suite's 12th-floor vantage point provides one of the city's only flush views of the Statehouse: It ought to convince anyone who doubted the verisimilitude of Matt Damon's digs in The Departed. Speaking of Oscar winners, many cast members of both that film and Mystic River called the Ritz (and its presidential suite) home while filming in Boston.

The Ritz suite could easily be the in-season home of a well-paid athlete or successful single entrepreneur. Its décor tends toward leather and chrome, with a sculpted gas fireplace bisecting the living room and a custom entertainment system providing individual options for each room. The suite's layout and soundproofing prevent sound from escaping into common spaces.

Though the Ritz just opened in 2001 and is equipped with thoroughly modern amenities, plans are already in the works for an $11 million upgrade—more proof that competition is high, and Boston's guests are the ultimate winners.

Ask and Ye Shall Receive

Luxury means never having to hear "We're sorry." Staying in one of Boston's top hotels means access to excess. Below are true tales of lavish lifestyles, brought to you by the guest services staffs that made them happen.

GUEST REQUEST: My husband's 50th birthday is this Thursday, and the watch he wants is only available in the Netherlands. Can you help?

XV BEACON RESPONSE: Dispatch senior concierge by limo to Logan, put him on the next KLM flight to Amsterdam. Purchase the five-figure Rolex and it awaits you in the suite on Thursday evening. Is there anything else we can do for you?

GUEST REQUEST: I'm flying into Boston next week. I'll be in town for three weeks. Can you please buy a Hummer and have it waiting for me?

RITZ-CARLTON RESPONSE: Immediately send guest services specialist to Herb Chambers to purchase a $40,000 loaded H3 and have the keys waiting at check-in. Will there be anything else, sir?

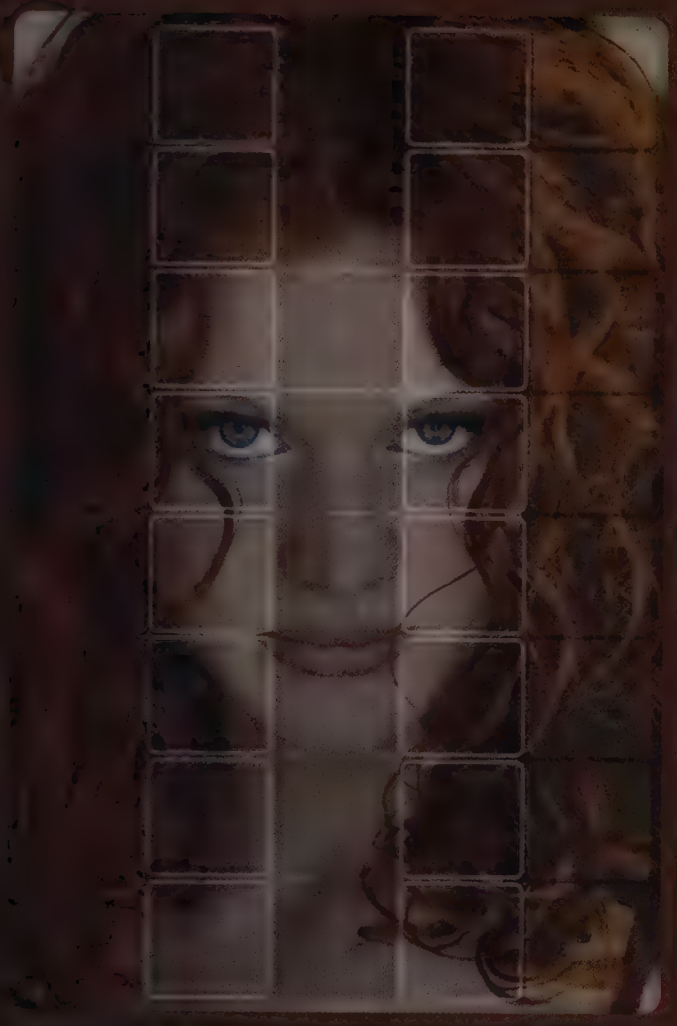
GUEST REQUEST: I'll be staying in your presidential suite for a month during my performances. May I book the adjoining room for my three cats again?



TAJ RESPONSE: Prepare the feline-friendly adjoining room and alert the chef that the cadre of calicos will be dining on the same custom-prepared meals they had during their last stay. Dover sole or pheasant under glass, ladies?

GUEST REQUEST: I'll be in town to perform a few shows next month, and I have to look good. I'd like to send a full-scale pilates gym in advance of my arrival. Can you please replace the current flooring in the presidential suite to accommodate?

FOUR SEASONS RESPONSE: Demo the current floor and replace it with the synthetic flooring required for the guest and instructors. One week later, reinstall the original floor. Any other conditions for the gym floor?

GUEST REQUEST: My wife is arriving at the airport. I'd like to make a big splash from the moment she sets foot in Boston.

BOSTON HARBOR HOTEL RESPONSE: Send a luxury yacht to pick her up with a full crew and two masseurs. Following a romantic harbor cruise, disembark to the presidential suite, where she's greeted with her favorite flowers, Moët & Chandon Brut Impérial Balthazar ($1,220 for a 12-liter bottle), and Meritage executive chef Daniel Bruce preparing an in-suite dinner. May we offer you the Dramamine and Advil parfait? —WL

SHE HAS THE MOST LUXURIOUS ROOM. TOO BAD YOU'LL NEVER SEE IT.

When you enter your room or suite, your first thought is "mmmm, very nice." Feel a twinge of power as you take in your expansive view high above the Harbor or the City. Your next thought: "This will work very nicely, thank you." Your mood brightens more as you realize you made the right choice in Hotels. You want to dive into the perfectly plumped bedding, but you wait until the bellman leaves. As the clean, modern, cozy atmosphere soaks in, you spot details like the super sleek widescreen TV, warm lighting, the spa-like bathroom with separate shower and bath, lots of room to work (but that can wait) and outlets in all the right places. Your conclusion, "The InterContinental got it right." Now, freshen up, then check out the scene below on the InterContinental Gardens. She's still there.

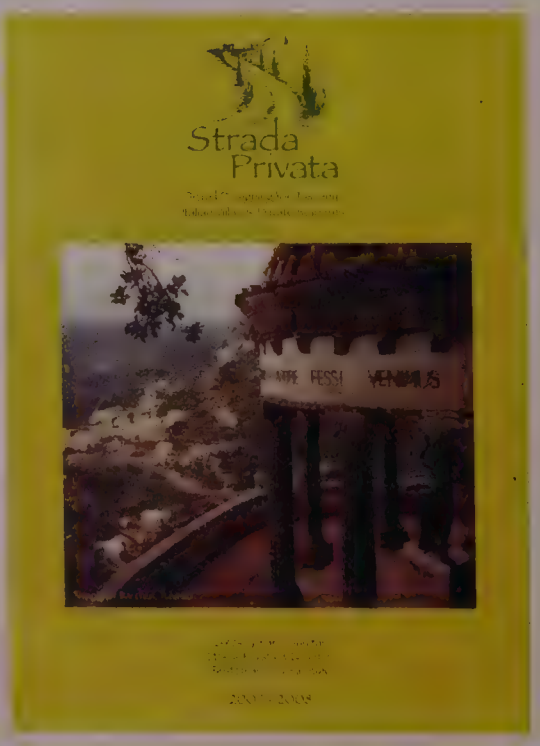
Leslie Talbot looks critically at the forces and fads and media persuadings that whoosh women toward marriage. Hand on figurative hip, she takes a giant right-angle turn, proclaiming, "Hey! It's not worth it!" Her fast-talking and very funny commentary looks at the boobs and boars who just can't be responsible or can't commit, building up to the guy who weasels out of the wedding because he's "too busy at work," and she lists the reasons they're "Big Fat Ass-----." Talbot excoriates the "sizzling heap of crap" that is the Mars and Venus empire of John Gray, mocking Gray's suggestions to women on how to catch a man and proposing frisky "Dependency Tips" of her own. To scare him away, Talbot suggests: "Ask him to help you take your cat to the vet." As for that mother of a single mother who held a lawn-side auction to find her daughter a guy? Tack-ee! In her refreshing and irreverent way, Talbot recalls her own boyfriend "Larry the Loser," studies the heartbreak and waste such faithless guys bring on and finds fresh air in not having them around, remaining without illusions. Single, droll.

KARMA ON DOWN FOR A WICCAN GOOD TIME



Ritual Arts (153 Harvard Ave., Allston; 617-787-4157) sells items metaphysical, magical, spiritual, gothic and naughty.

A gray cockatiel sets the stage by perching insouciantly on the shoulder of Ritual Arts' Dave as a black cat slithers by. Backstage, owner Toni is addressed by her parrot arrestingly clad in bright red, yellow and blue feathers. Beauty, in the form of gorgeous Native American jewelry and other dramatically spacious necklaces, rubs elbows here with metaphysical and Dark Artsy things like a skull-and-crossbones toilet brush or a toothy Elvis statue. Many things here are half-gorgeous, half-scary, like the clock encasing a textured dragon, its claws akimbo. A dreamy black lamp shows a graceful recumbent lady illuminated by a shell, all moonlighty. Another tree-like item has blue glass cups to hold myriad twinkly candles. The spiritual floats about in pretty fairy cards by Amy Brown and good-karma flags. Under chimes and dreamy swirling crystals, surrounded by statues of the Buddha (some of them stretchy and laughing; others serene) or a black Madonna and child with golden faces, seekers can pose hereafter-focused inquiries to a Ouija board bathed in an aura of Egyptian musk. At the back of the store, a discreet Naughtyland sports red leather minis and a short leopardskin dress that's frisky with black feathers suggestively flirting around the bottom.

Copia's traditional fare and polished touches heat up the Charlestown dining scene.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

Meze Estiatorio is no longer with us. That delightful Greek restaurant, with its curved wall of high windows facing west at the northern end of the Charlestown bridge, quietly closed a few months ago. Fortunately, its superb space didn't remain empty long. Its successor, Copia, maintains and expands the Mediterranean focus of its cuisine and continues to take advantage of the marvelous site, including a spectacular view of the beautiful Leonard Zakim–Bunker Hill Bridge, dramatically illuminated at night so that the steel suspension seems to reach to the stars. Recognizing the first-rate job that had been done by Meze's designer, Copia's owners have made minimal changes to the restaurant's interior. They've retained the attractive teardrop chandeliers that punctuate the airy space created by its lofty ceiling, as well as the handsome arcade separating the dining room from its long bar. The only noticeable alteration, a new wall at one end of the dining room, partially encloses the formerly open kitchen. Beige napery and elegant, ultralong-stemmed wine glasses continue to grace the tables.

Seafood paella

While I read the menu, servers brought hard-crusted bread and a pair of small bowls, one with fava bean purée with a faint hint of garlic, and the other with fruity, aromatic extra-virgin olive oil. This assuaged my hunger as I perused Copia's substantial wine list, distinguished by a number of fine, reasonably priced wines. Among the reds, the 2005 Altos Los Hormitas malbec ($24) from Argentina offered luscious fruit, softened tannins and smooth finish at a bargain price. More expensive, the 2004 Sedora Donnafugata nero d'avola ($30), a Sicilian grape variety very much in vogue at the moment, is a full-bodied wine with an inviting bouquet and good acidity.

Copia's hot appetizers, uniformly outstanding, started with the Portuguese-style clams ($15). These 12 large, tender, flavorful clams, poached in white wine with assertively spiced pork sausage, garlic, oregano and flat-leafed Italian parsley, left a lasting impression. A robustly flavored combination—clams and pork are often found together in Portuguese dishes—the clams set a high standard for the dishes that followed. The baby octopus ($15), braised in an exquisite, provocatively spiced harissa, more than met this standard. Harissa, a condiment made from smoked red peppers, tomatoes, garlic and cumin, has been central to much of Mediterranean cuisine for centuries, especially in the North African countries of Morocco and Tunisia. It worked its ancient magic on Copia's dish, a generous portion served in a striking, asymmetrical white bowl that sloped upward on one side to better display these tender, tentacled critters in eye-catching fashion.

A third hot appetizer, wood-grilled sardines ($14), brought two plump, flavorful sardines that had been cooked to perfect texture so that the spine and bones could be extracted with ease, leaving firm, flavorful flesh enhanced by the faint, pleasantly smoky evidence of wood roasting. A few squeezes of fresh lemon made them exquisite, while al dente roasted fingerling potatoes provided the perfect accompaniment. Less successful appetizers came from the selection of cold Mediterranean antipasti, a list of nine ($4 each) that ranged from stuffed grape leaves to grilled pita bread. Of the three I tried, two were tasty but served in such tiny portions as to constitute a tease. Stuffed grape leaves, fresh and lemony, consisted of three diminutive cylinders dispatched in a couple of bites. The zucchini and mint fritters were equally good but also sparse, although they were far better than the sorry-looking small plate of refrigerator-cold artichoke hearts. It was difficult to tell whether the four tiny pieces were quarters or miniscule halves, and they made me think of Groucho Marx's celebrated complaint about poor food and small portions.

Copia's pasta selections, hand-cut tagliatelle with Bolognese sauce ($22) and homemade gnocchi with garlicky broccoli rabe and sweet sausage ($24), got us back on the right track. The tagliatelle, obviously fresh judging from the firm but tender texture, proved a worthy vehicle for a meaty but light and delicate white sauce. Even though I'm not a fan of America's notoriously supersized portions, the tagliatelle's small portion was a surprise given its main-course price. An order of gnocchi seemed more substantial in size, and the kitchen graciously accommodated our party of four by dividing and plating it in the kitchen. In my experience, gnocchi can be sublime or dreadful, and Copia's light, airy, almost ethereal gnocchi belonged in the former category. The combination of these delicate pillows of pasta and assertively flavored broccoli and sausage made this one of the standouts of the menu.

Main courses included three triumphs, one "almost" triumph and one disappointment. The disappointment came in the form of seafood paella ($35), a combination of lobster, shrimp, clams, mussels, squid, chicken, chorizo, tomato, fennel and rice. The dismal, mealy texture of the shrimp dragged down what otherwise might've been worthy ingredients, especially the decent lobster, sweet-spicy sausage and silky, tender squid. The rice could've used a bit more saffron—admittedly a pricey ingredient—but its principal shortcoming was its texture. Rather than crusty and firm, it emerged flaccid and soggy. The "almost" dish, braised lamb shank ($28), brought a caveman-sized bone attached to a small mountain of fork-tender, moist meat with robust lamb flavor. But a puzzling lack of herbs or spices, usual taken for granted in Mediterranean cuisine, detracted from the dish and was not remedied by the crumbles of bland feta cheese sprinkled on top.

Chef Anthony Caturano

Far better than the lamb, the rotisserie chicken ($22), with crisp skin and succulent flesh, came garnished with creamy mashed potatoes and superb braised greens with pleasantly bitter nuances. The pork chop ($28) stood a full three inches high on the plate. Its crisp-roasted exterior (it appeared to have been battered with panko crumbs) encased tender, medium-rare (as ordered) flesh into which a wedge of Gruyère cheese had been inserted, making the dish even richer. The accompaniment of delectable vinegared peppers and perfect-textured fingerling potatoes made this dish a full-course meal. Finally among the main courses, and clearly the most memorable, was a roasted whole branzini ($26). This hefty sea bass, sized right for a generous single serving, came garnished with a marvelous assortment of variously hued olives, including juicy, purple kalamatas. Surprisingly the waiter didn't offer to bone the fish, but it turned out not to matter, because careful cooking had made it easy to remove the bones from the fish's firm, flavorful flesh.

The Mediterranean thrust of Copia's cuisine was paralleled by the grace and warmth of its service. Our server one evening, an older, experienced man with an engaging Neapolitan accent, carefully refolded our napkins each time one of us left the table. His helpful, informed advice in negotiating Copia's menu complemented his unfailingly gracious, almost courtly demeanor and attention to niceties. On a subsequent evening, a younger, earnest, but no less warm, friendly and professional waiter who seemed barely past his teens was equally efficient and attentive.

On the second of two visits, our dessert choices—a cappuccino crème brûlée ($9) with good flavor but bizarre texture, and a rather boring and undistinguished warm chocolate cake ($9)—disappointed greatly, and when I called their inadequacy to the attention of our waiter, he insisted on removing them from our bill. Perhaps I found the desserts wanting in contrast to the generally high quality of the courses that preceded them. More likely, these midweek desserts suffered in comparison with those offered during my first visit to Copia, when the restaurant featured a spectacular dessert table ($10 per person) originally created for Valentine's Day. A treasure trove of sweet treats that was heavy on the chocolate, the desserts tempted gluttony and defied self-restraint. Two large fountains of chocolate sauce with fresh fruit for dipping, first-rate bittersweet chocolate mousse with whipped cream, macadamia nut–cluster brittle, fresh spice cookies, moist macaroons, stunning lemon squares and three varieties of chocolate truffles (one laced with Grand Marnier) would have been impossible to equal under almost any circumstances. Perhaps I'll return to try Copia's à la carte desserts when that incomparable dessert table has faded from my memory. IB

Strength in Numbers

Ten years, 16 chefs, over $100K… plus, Gargoyles, Meritage and Aujourd'hui

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Why does the annual fundraising dinner for Share Our Strength's Operation Frontline sell out every year? Is it because 100 percent of the proceeds benefit the charity? Because it's a multichef sit-down dinner instead of a stand-in-line-for-a-sample event? Whatever the reason, Jason Santos, chef at Gargoyles on the Square in Somerville and a regular participant in the event, says this year's dinner, on April 23, will be an extravaganza worthy of marking the fundraiser's 10th year.

"This is definitely the biggest year," he says, regarding the roster of 16 chefs who will crowd the kitchen of Tremont 647. "It's usually six chefs." Besides the usual "celebrity chef" suspects—Frank McClelland of L'Espalier, Michael Schlow of Radius, Jody Adams of Rialto, Joanne Chang of Flour—host Andy Husbands invited Rick Moonen of Las Vegas' Restaurant RM Seafood. Each course, including a "raw dish" course and a "foie" course, features two different dishes from two chefs.

"It's fun for us," says Santos, whose foie course pairs the luxury liver with doughnut blinis, freeze-dried peaches and crushed coffee. "It's a take on coffee and doughnuts," he says.

Tickets for the event are priced at $175 as a "minimum contribution," but Husbands says guests are extremely generous. "We've had people give thousands," he says. And the generosity extends to everyone in the house: "Waiters donate all their tips, and they've done that every year," he adds proudly. Maybe that's why this year the total amount of money raised from the event hits the $100,000 mark.

Gargoyles on the Square's Jason Santos

Fantastic Creatures…

…is a concise description of gargoyles. Equally fantastic, and more exuberant, are the descriptions on Santos' new spring menu at Gargoyles: reorganized baby-artichoke dip; miso–ginger ale shrimp; Kobe tartare with "buttered popcorn syrup and crispy truffle mayonnaise"; and postmodern chicken noodle soup with "virtual chicken noodles" are a few of the starters.

Just a Spoonful of Salmon

At Meritage in the Boston Harbor Hotel, chef Daniel Bruce has created a "Bar Bites Menu" that literally offers a bite-size version of regular menu items. Served o Japanese soup spoons, the selection in cludes maple-smoked salmon and cucum ber hash; chicken, porcini mushroom an truffle salad; and roast foie gras wit black-pepper cranberry sauce. One size one price: each spoonful is $3.50, o choose three for $10. Meanwhile, at Au jourd'hui in the Four Seasons, che William Kovel has introduced a new ba menu that runs the gamut from haute– terrine of foie gras with blood orange con fiture and warm brioche—to hoi polloi– that oh-so-trendy French Canadian trea of poutine: french fries topped wit cheese curds and gravy. What to drin with that: a black currant Manhattan Yuzu julep? Pabst Blue Ribbon?

Upcoming

Ken Oringer is getting ready to open Mexican restaurant with John Delph (most recently chef at Sorellina).... Ol in Harvard Square is creating an "outdoo eating oasis."... Seth Woods' Gaslight o Harrison is slated to open in June. iB

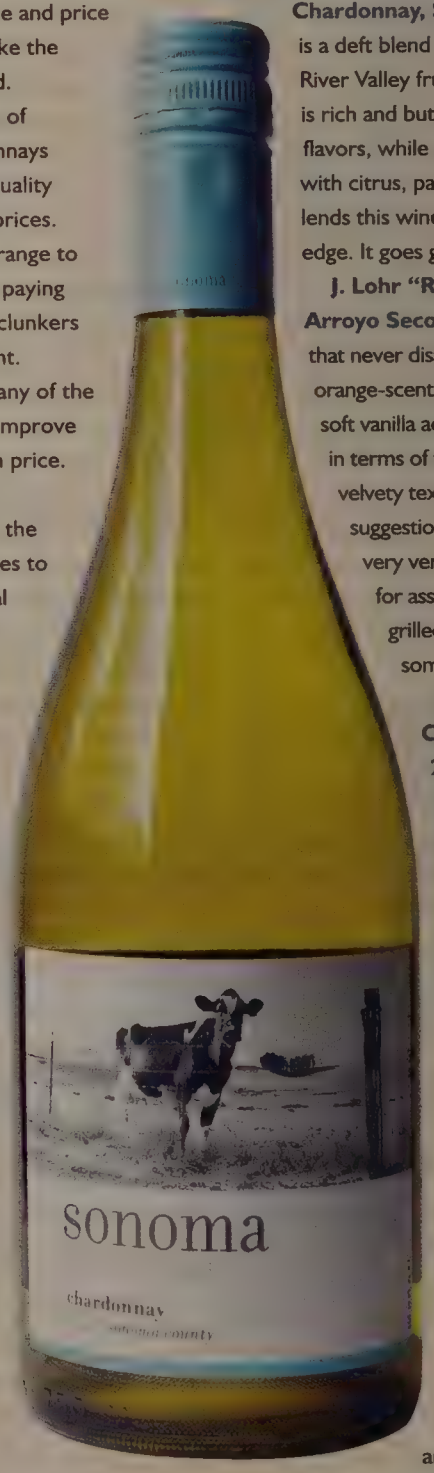
WINE



Chardonnay's Day

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

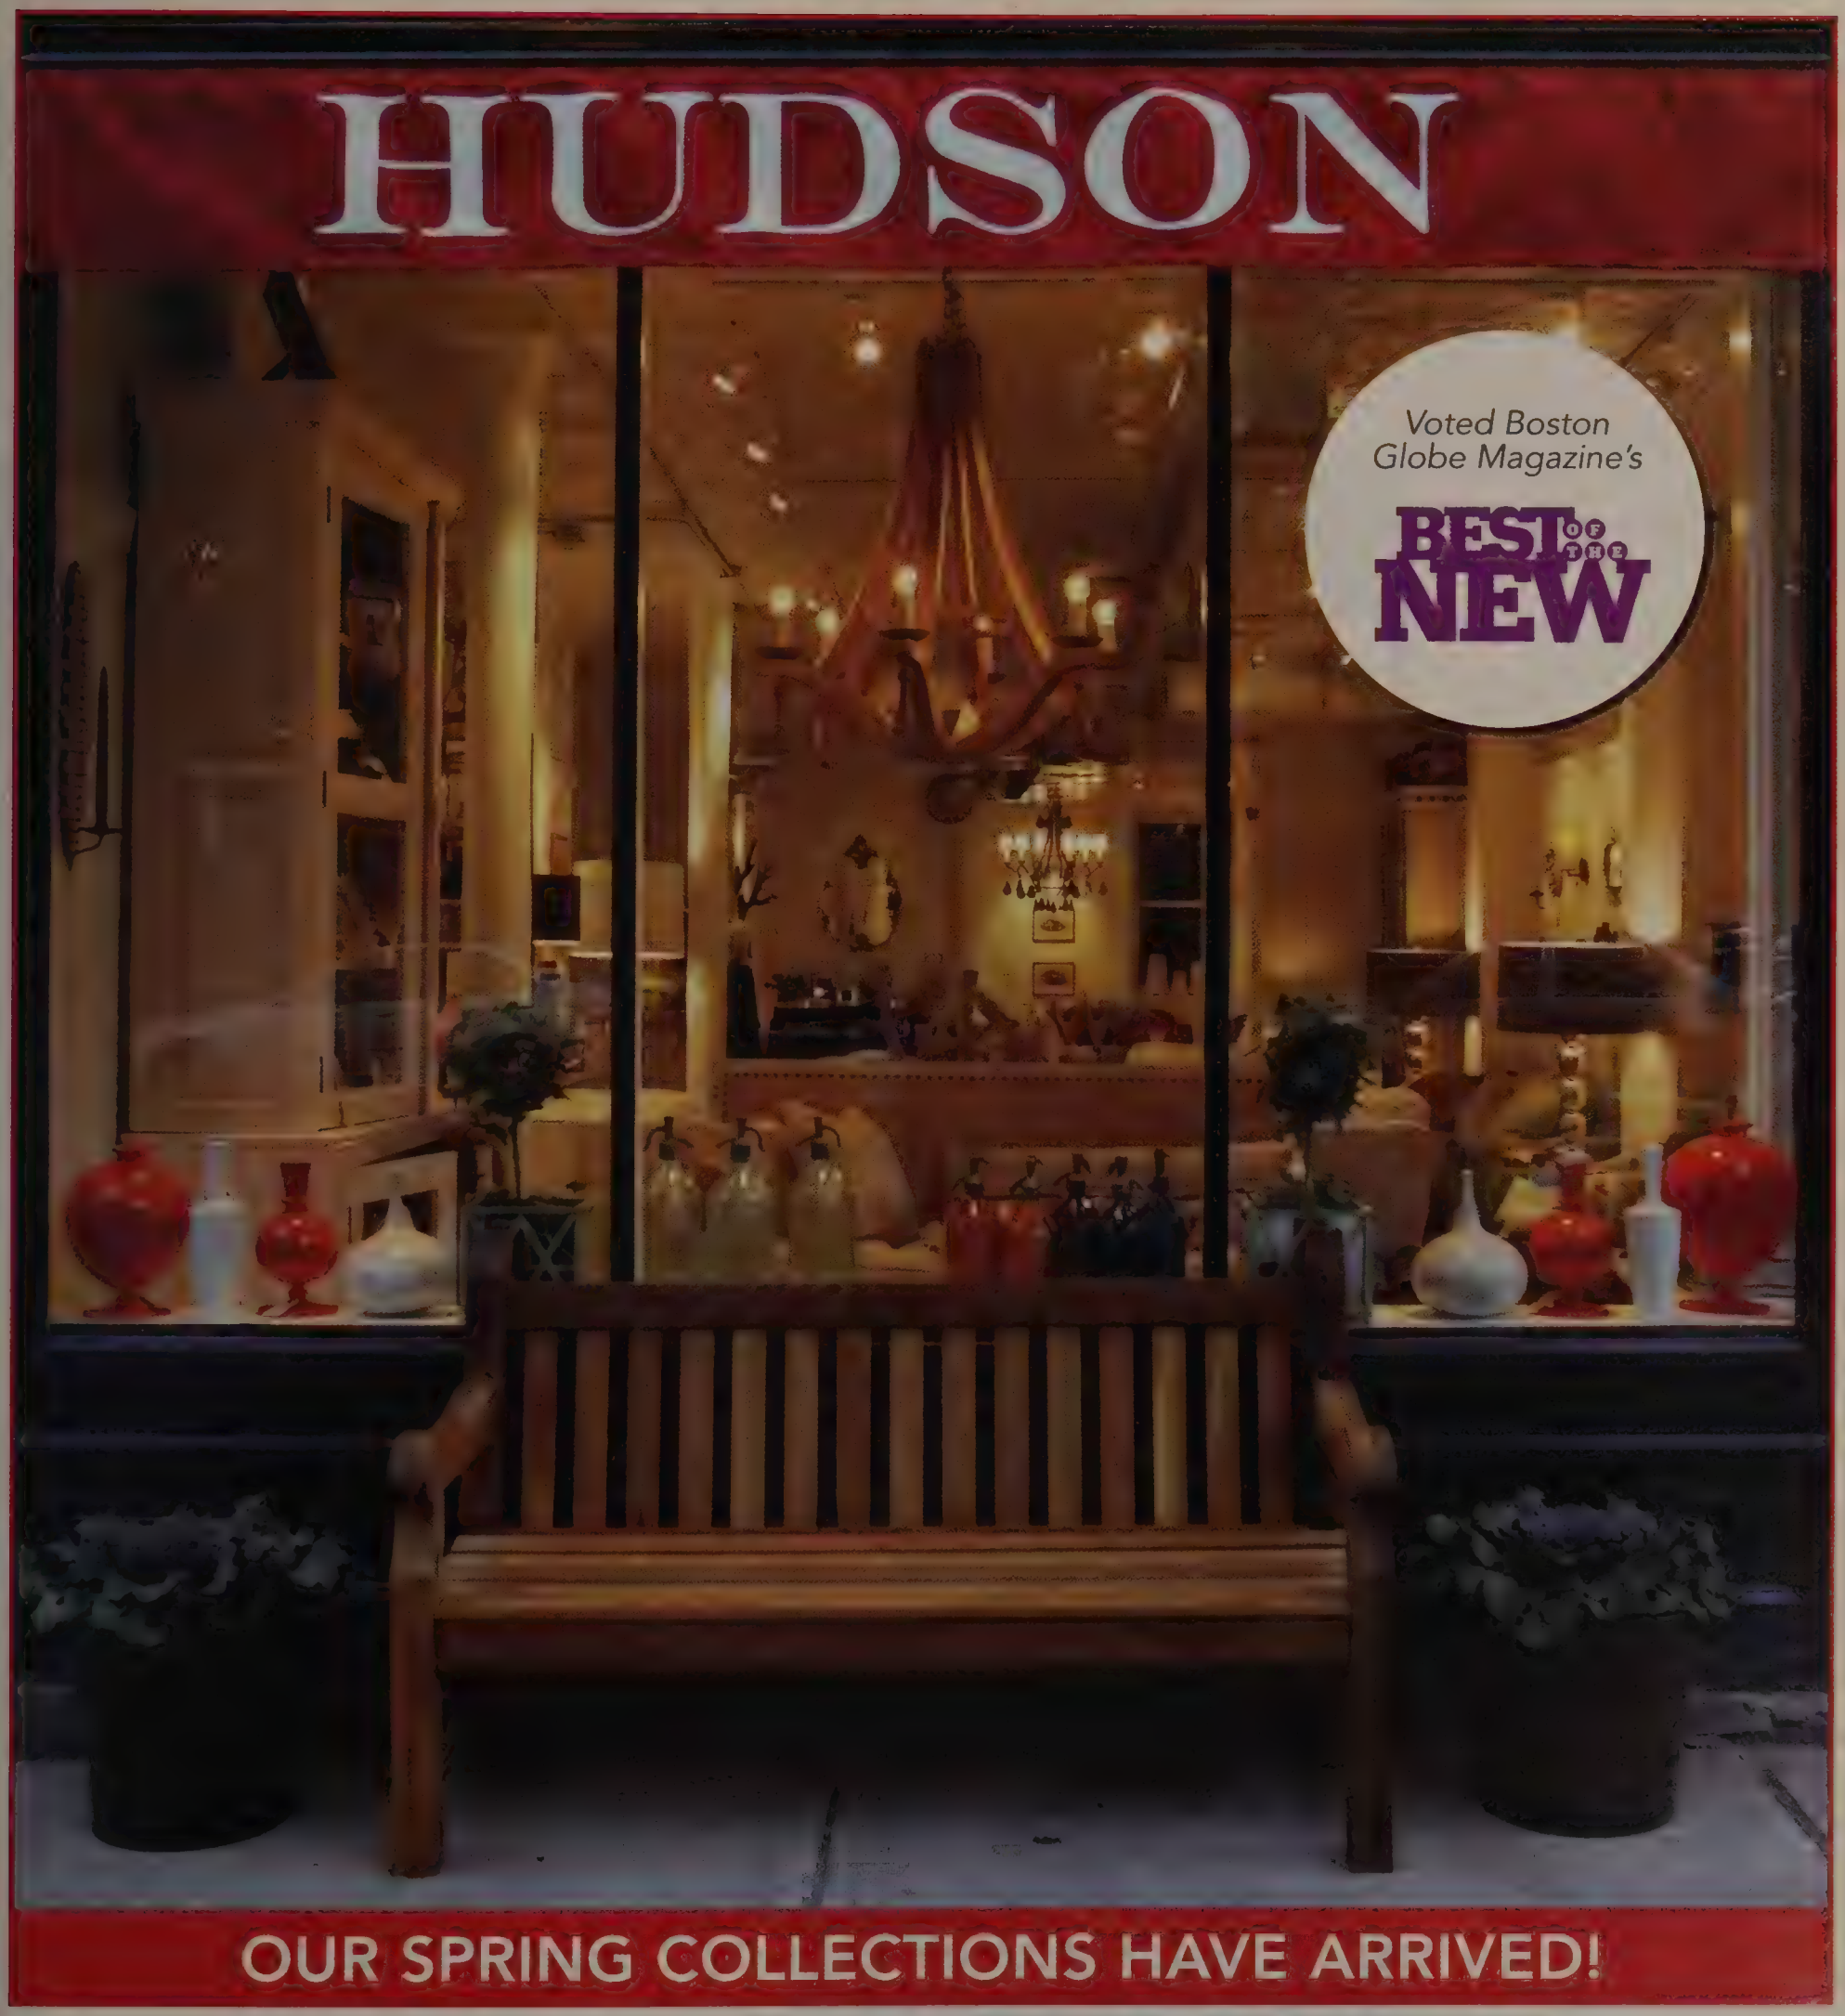
Chardonnay again? The wine just won't go away. Maybe it's not entirely fashionable, maybe no one you know admits to drinking it, but in a world of wines that are increasingly red, chardonnay continues to be the most popular grape variety among Americans. Is it because chardonnays offer so much variety that it's easy for most people to find one in virtually any style and price range? Or maybe we just like the wine because it tastes good.

My recent blind tastings of moderately priced chardonnays show a very high level of quality even at relatively modest prices. Stylistically there's a huge range to choose from, but if you're paying $12 or more a bottle, the clunkers are no longer that prevalent. Competition has driven many of the mediocre wines to either improve or go further downward in price. Given that, it becomes a challenge to narrow down the range of chardonnay choices to those that fit your personal palate. This may be why chardonnay drinkers tend to be a bit more brand-oriented. When we get one we like, we tend to stick with it.

Since the following group of blind tasting choices reflects my own personal preferences, let me state up front what I look for. For me, a chardonnay delivers quality and value if it's smooth in texture, with no harsh edges; if it's not too tropical in scent or flavor; and if the fruit flavors hint and echo rather than twist and shout. In general, subtlety and layering of flavor are qualities I most prize in a chardonnay.

Sonoma Vineyards Chardonnay, Sonoma, 2005 ($12). This wine is produced by an offshoot of the famed Rodney Strong Vineyards, and it's quite a value. Completely unoaked, with fresh apple, delicately spicy and yeasty scents, this pale-colored wine has a creamy, smooth texture and mild, understated fruit flavors. This is definitely a chardonnay for pinot grigio lovers looking to branch out. It's very satisfying.

Jim-Jim "Unoaked" Chardonnay, McLaren Vale, Australia, 2006 ($12). A modestly priced wine from the high-rent district of McLaren Vale, Jim-Jim is made by well-regarded family vintner Hugh Hamilton. It's very dry and well-balanced with a mellow richness that would pair well with crab or shrimp.



Belvedere "Healdsburg Ranches" Chardonnay, Sonoma, 2004 ($15). This is a deft blend of Alexander and Russian River Valley fruit that has a deep color and is rich and buttery on the palate. The flavors, while ripe, are balanced nicely with citrus, particularly on the finish, which lends this wine's full flavors a refreshing edge. It goes great with grilled fish.

J. Lohr "Riverstone" Chardonnay, Arroyo Seco, 2005 ($15). An old favorite that never disappoints, this wine has an orange-scented, slightly spicy aroma with soft vanilla accents. It's relatively low-key in terms of the wood treatment, has a velvety texture and finishes with a suggestion of grilled nuts. The wine is very versatile but probably best suited for assertively flavored chicken and grilled fish dishes that incorporate some lemon in the preparation.

Kunde Estate Chardonnay, Sonoma, 2005 ($16). The Kunde family have been grape growers for generations. This honey-scented, slightly smoky wine is quite flavorful, with apple and lemon notes. It was 60 percent fermented in French oak barrels, and then a quarter of the blend aged in new wood. There's nothing heavy or ponderous about the wine, though. Medium in body, it's delicious with snapper or mahi.

Lake Sonoma Chardonnay, Russian River Valley, 2004 ($16). This is a very satisfying chardonnay with lush honey and butterscotch scents and an ultrasmooth texture. It tastes much more expensive than it is. The Russian River Valley is noted for its well-structured pinot noir and chardonnay, and this wine is refreshing to drink on its own, although perhaps best suited for fish. The yeasty vanilla-and-spice undertones would make it a perfect foil for grilled scallops. iB

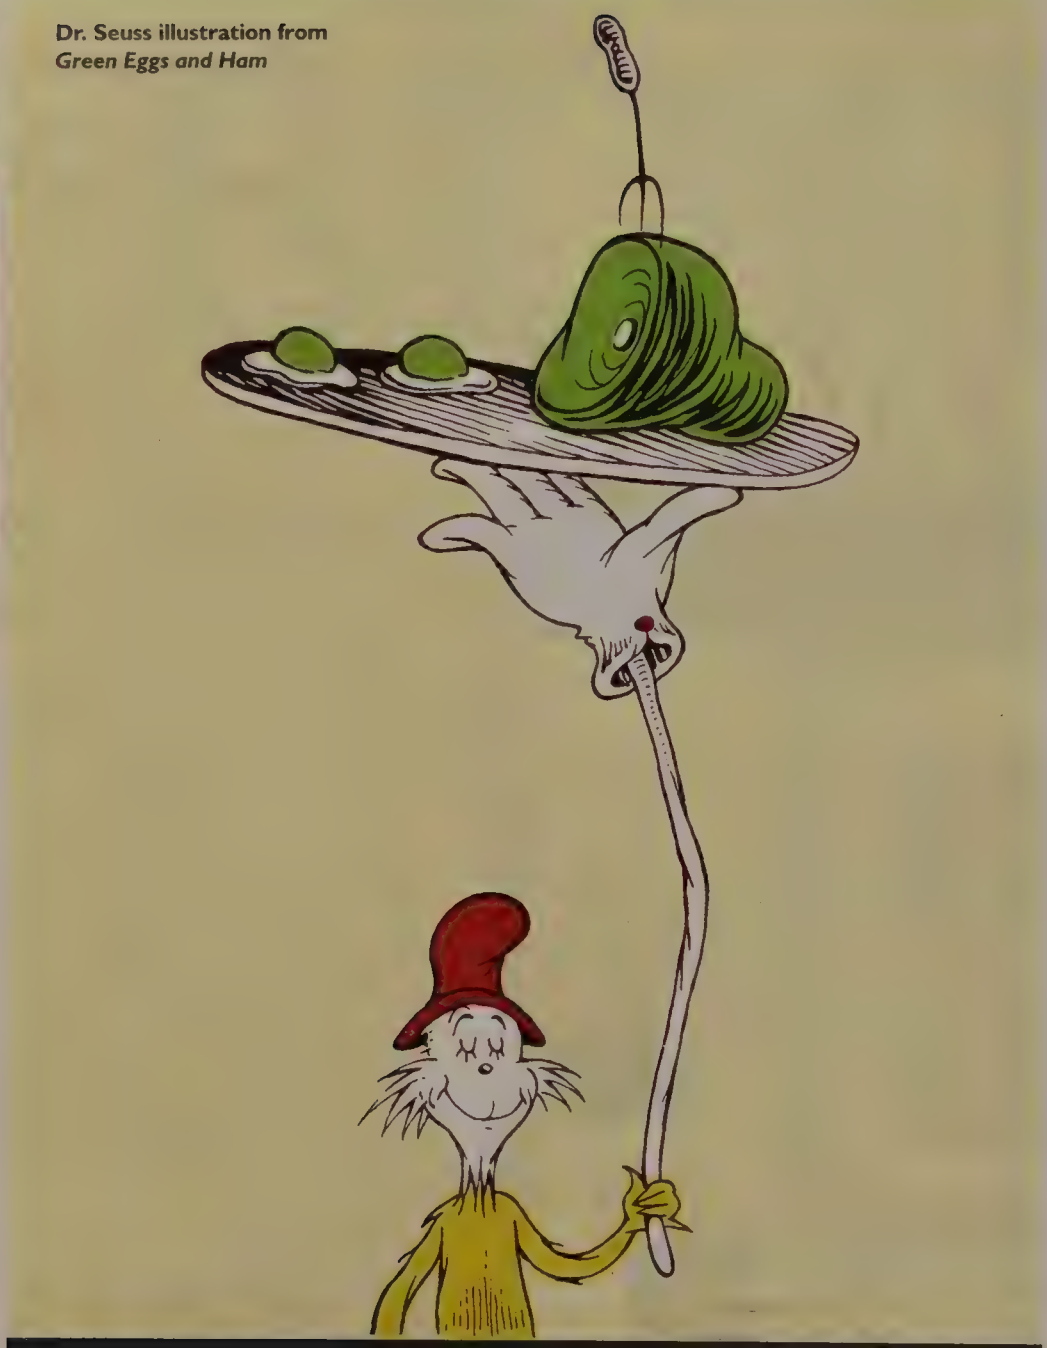
Music: Taylor Made



It used to be that here in Boston, the only hicks we ever cared much about were the ones from French Lick, but in this newfound world of reality TV and drunken Paula Abduls, a new Hicks has come to the forefront—American Idol: Season 5 winner Taylor Hicks. The silver-topped singer's nationwide tour—in celebration of his first post-Idol album—brings him to Avalon on April 3, where, we assume, the Soul Patrol will be in full force, alongside a series of herky jerky dance moves and some pretty chill music. Avalon, 15 Lansdowne St., Boston (617-931-2000). www.ticketmaster.com. 7:30 pm. $30. —RL

Museums and Galleries: Boston Hears a Who!

"You have brains in your head. You have feet in your shoes. You can steer yourself any direction you choose." So wrote Theodor Seuss Geisel in his popular picture book Oh the Places You'll Go, and if you're a member of the tribe that loves Seuss, we suggest you steer your feet over to Newbury Fine Arts in the next few weeks. The gallery is hosting a tribute to the author and the 50th anniversary of The Cat in the Hat with the touring exhibition, The Art of Dr. Seuss, which chronicles his life, work and secret art collection, including rare and never-before-seen pieces from the '20s to the '90s. Beginning with his early drawings for Life magazine, works include his editorial, advertising, military and book illustrations among pieces from his private collection. Visit on March 22 or 23 and meet the curator, William W. Dreyer, who'll share insights into Geisel's artistic life and his impact on American culture. *Newbury Fine Arts, 29 Newbury St., Boston (617-536-0210). www.newburyfinearts.com. Tastings: Mmm... Tastes Like the Back Bay

It'd take a lot of walking and a huge chunk of change to take in all the Back Bay dining scene has to offer in one night, unless of course it's March 29, when many of the neighborhood's culinary giants converge at the Copley Place atrium for the annual Taste of the Back Bay. The event features a sampling of signature dishes from such restaurants as Avila, Excelsior, L'Espalier and Sorellina paired with beverages from Harpoon, Huntington Wines, Bauer Wines and Boston Beer Company. Proceeds from the night will help maintain more than 600 historic trees in the area as well as benefit the Neighborhood Association of the Back Bay. Copley Place Atrium, Boston (617-859-7787). 6:30-9:30 pm. $75-$95. —RL

Tastings: Wonder Spice

The literal feeling we get from an event called A Spoonful of Ginger isn't a particularly tasty one, but the roster of chefs participating in this year's annual diabetes fundraiser erases any doubt that A Spoonful of Ginger will be anything but delicious. The benefit, which takes place on April 3 at the State Room, offers the chance to taste fare from some of the area's best Asian chefs, like Ming Tsai (Blue Ginger), Joanne Chang (Flour Bakery & Café) and Catherine Chen (Douzo), while you take in live music from acts like Boston Chinese Chamber Music. All proceeds go to Joslin Diabetes Center's Asian American Diabetes Initiative. It'll be a great night for your taste buds, and judging by the $200 a head admission price, a boon to Joslin. State Room, 60 State St., Boston (617-732-2412). http://aadi.joslin.harvard.edu. 6-8 pm. $200. —RL

Solid as a Rock

Live Free or Die mines the Granite State for serious laughs.

BY SEAN BURNS

Aaron Stanford thinks up the next big scheme as John "Rugged" Rudgate

An agreeable misfit caper comedy with a ton of local flavor, this promising first effort from former Seinfeld writers Greg Kavet and Andy Robin is basically the world's longest New Hampshire joke. It's bound to inspire snickers of recognition even if, like me, you haven't had any reason to go to the Granite State ever since Mitt got rid of the blue laws. (Who doesn't miss those Sunday pilgrimages over the border during football season?)

Named after everybody's favorite license plate motto, Live Free or Die adopts a cheeky pseudomythic tone in chronicling the misadventures of John "Rugged" Rudgate, a criminal legend in his own mind who fancies himself the Billy the Kid of his podunk town. Played by Westford native Aaron Stanford, Rugged is one of those kids who got picked on a whole lot in school and thus tried to reinvent himself as a badass.

So far this low-rent Scarface's illegal activities have been limited to a few stolen diplomas from the local tractor-trailer–driving school, as well as some assorted rebate coupon scams. But Rugged dares to dream. He drives around all day in a dilapidated van with a faulty parking brake (a sight gag that never gets old) selling speakers he claims are stolen, even though he keeps forgetting to remove the sales slips that prominently exhibit both his name and payment information.

Rugged likes to claim responsibility for the unsolved murder of a local logger, but the only person who's actually gullible enough to believe him is Paul Schneider's sublimely amusing Legrand. Schneider is a favorite of writer-director David Gordon Green, and his zonked, slightly ethereal manner is pure comic gold. Regarding the world through a fog of confusion, preening and shaking his head to see around his too-long bangs, Legrand is an especially endearing dim bulb. He's just inherited half of the local "You Lock" storage facility, and he swears it's the best job he's ever had—probably because his sister (Zooey Deschanel) does all the work.

Legrand catches up with Rugged while the latter is peeling UPC symbols off vodka bottles to get $3 off at the local package store, and the two share some not-so-fond memories of working at the local clam shack, among other assorted high school embarrassments.

It turns out Legrand was mistakenly classified as retarded for a couple years back then. Much in the way that this slowpoke is the only person who'll believe his old friend's tall tales of lawlessness, Rugged's perhaps the only dude in town who doesn't side with that first diagnosis.

How these two small-time sad sacks wind up on the lam and wanted for murder is a long story, one penned with the same clockwork comic escalation of Murphy's Law scenarios that Kavet and Robin brought to their famous "Junior Mints" episode of Seinfeld. Spun off from a sitcom pilot, Live Free or Die exhibits the tight structure that's a hallmark of TV comedy but is too often missing from big-screen farces these days.

It'd be a shame to give away exactly how Michael Rapaport's dense, cuckolded rookie cop fits into all this, and I doubt there's space to explain all the trouble caused by Judah Friedlander's slobbo pervert hardware-store owner, who as a hobby makes homemade pornos in the Servi-Star's cluttered storage room.

The droll Friedlander can be seen every week playing a goofball variation of SNL gag writer Frank Sebastiano on NBC's 30 Rock, and both his muttonchops and fondness for mesh caps make a smooth match with Live Free or Die's tattered landscape of junkbox cars, busted septic tanks and overflowing ashtrays. This film creates a convincing world where the "You Lock" storage facility truly is a place of pride.

Stanford is best known for playing Iceman in the X-Men films, though he also killed his share of zombies in the grotesque right-wing remake of The Hills Have Eyes. He's got the right jabbering delivery for Rugged's oversold phony bravado. Still, it's hard not to wish Kavet and Robin hired a more seasoned comedian for the role. Motor-mouthed losers are tricky to play, and occasionally when Stanford is supposed to be annoyingly funny, he's just plain annoying.

Luckily, Stanford usually isn't too far away from Schneider, whose dead-on space-shot timing seems to indicate that he's just commuting here from another planet. Fans of David Gordon Green's All the Real Girls might find a weird bit of extratextual incestuous dissonance, as Paul Schneider and Zooey Deschanel played star-crossed lovers in that picture, only to reteam here as bickering siblings.

A modest pleasure that suggests bigger and better things on the horizon for this creative team, Live Free or Die is the kind of lightweight romp where two crooks can spend hours burying their ill-gotten, easily traceable swag in the woods, not realizing until it's too late that they're in somebody's backyard.

Live Free or Die ★★★

Written and directed by Greg Kavet and Andy Robin. Starring Aaron Stanford, Paul Schneider, Michael Rapaport, Zooey Deschanel and Judah Friedlander. Opens March 30 at Harvard Square.

Because I Said So ★

This smutty, headache-inducing calamity wast the formidable comedic talents of Diane Keato whipping her into a nattering, nails-on-a-blac board frenzy as an overbearing single mother s cretly auditioning suitors for her wallflow youngest (Mandy Moore). Keaton picks out suave, jerky architect (Tom Everett Scott), whi Moore discovers real happiness with a poor dressed, down-on-his-luck guitar player (Gabri Macht). One of those movies that would be ov in 10 minutes if anybody on-screen were capab of behaving like a rational adult, Because I Said piles on so many noisy crossed signals, misunde standings and nonsense that by the time Keato character loses her voice, it feels like a blessin Lauren Graham and Piper Perabo round out t family, who loudly discuss all sorts of inappropria sexual matters in crowded restaurants and sho ping malls. Misleadingly marketed as a fami comedy, this movie has more nonstop talk abo orgasms and male genitalia than an entire seas of Sex and the City. Yuck. (At Fenway and in t suburbs.)

Black Snake Moan ★★★

Writer-director Craig Brewer's widely acclaime gruesomely misogynistic, full-of-you-know-wh Hustle & Flow was basically Pretty Woman, only pimps instead of hookers. Black Snake Moan fin Brewer back in that dirty South he photograp with such skanky grit and authenticity, zeroing here on Christina Ricci's sex-crazed nymphet, c lapsing into hysterical fits of self-pleasuring fren on the front lawn mere seconds after her jitte boyfriend (another shockingly fine performance Justin Timberlake) departs for basic trainin Samuel L. Jackson's God-fearing blues singer eve tually chains this wanton Lolita to his radiator, tempting to "cure" her of such wickedness. Bu funny thing happens while Black Snake Mo seems on its way to becoming the most offensi movie ever made: Brewer's vapid horror-mov conception of female sexuality takes a backseat the depth and generosity of both Jackson a Ricci's performances. Once the shackles are u done and the movie stops wailing for your atte tion, Black Snake settles into a pure, gently patern love story along the lines of Million Dollar Ba Such a shame about that loudmouthed, posturi phony first hour. (At Boston Common, Fenw and in the suburbs.)

Blood Diamond ★★

Director Edward Zwick, who started out as a coc ator of the TV show thirtysomething before movi into bloated, preachy spectacles such as Cour Under Fire and The Last Samurai, makes acti movies for guilty liberals. Trying to swaddle his lentless message-mongering in slick Hollywo clichés, Zwick often comes up with the worst both worlds: big-budget adventures that grind t halt every 10 minutes to lecture you. Blood D mond should've been a corker, as the Sierra Le diamond massacres of the late 1990s are rich w cinematic possibilities, and Leonardo DiCaprio livers a surprisingly convincing, charismatic perf mance as a scummy smuggler taking advantage noble mine slave (Djimon Hounsou, who's pla so many slaves in movies since starring in Amist he could probably perform Roots as a one-m show by now) to chase a pink diamond the size golf ball. Alas, Zwick squanders this promis setup with a devastating lack of forward mom tum. Every scene runs at least twice as long a needs to, and Zwick's pompous, self-conscio prestigious tone negates the story's gritty urger (At Fresh Pond and in the suburbs.)

Breach ★★★

The tale of traitor Robert Hanssen is a fascinati often embarrassing chunk of recent hist brought to the big screen with surprising er tional texture and fine attention to detail writer-director Billy Ray. A poker-faced seething Chris Cooper carries himself with an most overwrought rigidity, signaling untold te pests behind his eyes. In Cooper's brilliantly ph cal interpretation of the character, Hanss abruptness and fanatical Catholicism appear t the only things keeping untold demons in che He's a volcano ready to blow. Ryan Phillippe h his own as a cocky junior agent in over his he placed front and center for a massive FBI sting eration. Shattered Glass director Ray has a knack for portraying adults roaming the corri of power; white-collar intrigue suits him. But all his formidable gifts when it comes to chara

d performance, his visual technique falls somehere in the vicinity of boring competence. Ray esn't seem to think in pictures, and in the end, forgettable images are what separate the great ovies from good ones. (At Boston Common, nway and in the suburbs.)

y pick for the best picture of 2006, Alfonso Cuan's Children of Men is the kind of movie you only ought they didn't make anymore. A ruthless, anily politicized piece of speculative science fiction at conveniently doubles as an edge-of-your-seat ase thriller, the film uses a dark vision of the fure to critique the way we're living right now. As the best sci-fi, the film feels more topically and notionally keyed into our current, uneasy cultural oment than any present-tense tale possibly could. a frighteningly believable future London after a rldwide infertility crisis has sent civilization into violent tailspin, Clive Owen gives a magnificent d-school Humphrey Bogart performance, shepding humanity's last hope through a bombed-out ttleground and rediscovering depths of compason and valor he forgot he even had. Cuarón and s brilliant cinematographer, Emmanuel Lubezki, ve rewritten the rules of the action film, shooting clusively with available light and in a succession long, miraculously unbroken camera movements, us lending a nerve-wracking real-time anxiety to e proceedings. (At Fenway, Arlington, West ewton and in the suburbs.)

olor Me Kubrick ★★

nning barely an hour and 20 minutes yet still ice as long as it needs to be, this gaudy, awfully ained farce riffs on the stranger-than-fiction se of Alan Conway, a con-man who helped himf to a lot of free booze and young boys in Lonn during the early 1990s simply by claiming to reclusive, seldom-photographed filmmaker anley Kubrick. John Malkovich portrays the fey stler with a variety of horrid American accents d even more ill-advised fashion choices, gnawg away at every bit of scenery this low-budget oduction can afford. Amusing at first, the movie corporates some of Kubrick's signature music es into unlikely scenarios, as when Conway uritates on the train tracks to the strains of 2001's Also Sprach Zarathustra. But Color Me Kubrick soon devolves into the same damn scene over and over again, never allowing us inside the soul of this great pretender, and missing the satirical zing one might expect from an indictment our celebrity-obsessed culture. After all the mincing and carrying on, it's just an extended anecdote. (At Kendall Square.)

Ghost Rider ★½

Writer-director Mark Steven Johnson made such an unholy mess of the greatest Daredevil story Frank Miller ever wrote, it's no surprise that he's all thumbs again, adapting the Marvel Comics' très 1970s fusion of Goth postures and redneck rockin' that could've only flourished when an entire generation worshipped Evel Knievel. Ghost Rider gets a bumpy update to the X-Games era, with Nicolas Cage turning in his most off-the-charts crazy-pants performance in eons as Johnny Blaze, a stunt-biker who sold his soul to the devil (Peter Fonda, naturally) and thus finds himself staring down a trench-coat mafia full of undead teenagers. The flick's central conceit is way out of whack, as whenever Cage's superpowers kick in the actor's freakazoid facial expressions are replaced by a laughably unconvincing, computer-generated flaming skull. There's simply no way bargain-basement F/X could ever compete with the apoplectic weirdness of an untethered Nic Cage, talking in "his Elvis voice" while sipping jellybeans out of a martini glass and grooving to the soothing sounds of the Carpenters. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Host ★★★½

Part Friday-night monster movie, part dysfunctional family saga, with a healthy dollop of misanthropic social satire tossed into the mix, Bong Joon-ho's The Host is a seriously funny, frighteningly relevant, altogether smashingly entertaining riff on contemporary fears and anxieties. Sort of like what might happen if Godzilla attacked the Royal Tenenbaums, this roller coaster ride charts the redemption of one severely mixed-up brood, while a gigantic reptilian tortoise-looking creature stomps its way through South Korea, eating people. Bong's last film was the sly genre mashup Memories of Murder, and here he continues to find absurd comedy and humanity in the unlikeliest of settings. The Host veers into Dr. Strangelove territory upon the arrival of the American army, smuggling quite a few snarky geopolitical allegories into the wildest creature feature you'll see all year. Bonus points go to young actress Bae Du-na, the deadpan dynamo who toplined the Brattle's recent rave Linda Linda Linda. She's one of the flat-out funniest screen presences in movies right now. Jim Jarmusch needs to write her a starring role, stat. (At Kendall Square.)

Letters From Iwo Jima ★★★★

Originally intended as a bookend to last October's flawed-but-worthy Flags of Our Fathers, Letters From Iwo Jima emerges as something far stronger, more unprecedented—perhaps even revolutionary. Only an American icon like Clint Eastwood could get away with making a WWII battle epic told from the losing side's point of view. (In Japanese with English subtitles, no less!) The filmmaking is spare and elegant. Tom Stern's washed-out cinematography drains the color from the frame, save for sharp stabs of crimson blood. The soundtrack offers a mournful piano dirge wherever lesser directors would opt for full orchestral bombast. But what'll stay with you for days afterward are those long, unbearable passages of time cramped in dark, frightening tunnels, racked by the distant thunder of explosions, as these frightened young men are left with nothing to contemplate but their own impending demise. Eastwood never once questions the necessity of this war; he seeks only to illuminate its cost, which in the hands of such a sensitive filmmaker becomes almost too horrible to bear. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Lives of Others ★★★½

Turns out East Berlin wasn't such a nice place to live in 1984, a year presumably chosen with a wink and a smile by first-time writer-director Florian Henckel Von Donnersmark as the setting for this eerily quiet, breathtakingly suspenseful yarn. Ulrich Muhe delivers a performance of brilliant restraint and control as a ruthless Stasi true believer, suddenly discovering glimmers of a long-dormant conscience when assigned to shadow a fundamentally decent playwright (Powers Boothe look-alike Sebastian Koch) who just might be aiding and abetting some subversive pals during those dark days before the wall came crumbling down. Reminiscent of Francis Ford Coppola's The Conversation, The Lives of Others is all clammy paranoia and creeping dread, with Muhe's poker-faced turn somehow giving you everything and nothing at the same time. It's riveting stuff, watching a man discover just how badly his ideals have been twisted and perverted by power-mongering thugs in high places; enough to carry you through this otherwise crisp, understated picture's weird determination to offer more false endings than The Return of the King. (At Kendall Square.)

Music and Lyrics ★★★

Watching Hugh Grant in a romantic comedy these days is sort of like seeing Michael Jordan playing basketball in his prime—there's just such an effortless command and mastery of form it's easy to take the guy for granted. Grant swooshes at least four-dozen one-liners in this unexpectedly delightful music industry send-up, starring as a washed-up 1980s pop icon transparently based on "the other guy" from Wham! After years of touring amusement parks and high school reunions, the rump-shaking cad gets a shot at a big-time comeback thanks to the adoration of a pre-bald Britney-ish pop tart, but Hugh needs scatterbrained "plant lady" Drew Barrymore to write the lyrics for his music. I guess you could call it all predictable chick-flick rom-com stuff, helmed with little visual distinction by writer-director Marc Lawrence. But, at the same time, Grant and Barrymore are simply, wonderfully adorable, hanging back and doing what they're best at. The bubblegum ditties, by Fountains of Wayne's Adam Schlesinger, are the most infectiously hummable movie tunes I've heard since Schlesinger's own "That Thing You Do!" (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Norbit ★★½

Lewd, crude and undeniably funny, Eddie Murphy's latest lowbrow, fat-suit romp has sent audiences home in stitches while more sensible critics have been treating it like the death of modern culture. Truth is, it's a rather slapdash affair, directed with no particular style by former Head of the Class costar Brian Robbins, who seems to think that over-lighting the heck out of everything on a fake-looking studio back-lot will somehow pass for competent filmmaking. A shame, as the screenplay (coauthored by Murphy and his brother Charlie) is quite a fractured fable, recklessly sending up decades-worth of stereotypes in a deliberately artificial, small-town setting. Murphy pulls triple duty here, playing not just the title nebbish, but also an elderly Chinese fellow, as well as the gargantuan gal of nobody's dreams. As usual, Murphy is never more at home than when buried under mountains of prosthetic genius Rick Baker's makeup. He brings an astonishing amount of detail, specificity and pathos to these outré caricatures, finding slivers of humanity in even the most grotesque of disguises. The Number 23 ★½

The latest debacle from window-dresser turned filmmaker Joel Schumacher, The Number 23 revolves around watching Jim Carrey's kindly dog-catcher Walter Sparrow read a book. Now th entertainment. Walt's awfully engrossed in a b up page-turner, some goofy noir junk about a h boiled detective named Fingerling (also playe Carrey in gauzy, F/X-heavy fantasy sequences t suggest Sin City by way of the Village People) h ing a lot of creepy sex and becoming mesmer by the spellbinding properties of the title nume Apparently, if you work hard enough at add subtracting or multiplying any series of numb you can always find your way back to 23. Prov that dumb people shouldn't be allowed near r els, Carrey's Sparrow immediately leaps to conclusion that this particular tale is actually life story, starts writing all over the walls and his body, and eventually decides that the sini integer has targeted him as its next victim. folks, it has come to this: We're supposed t frightened of a number. an's Labyrinth ★★★½ his boldly original grown-up fairy tale from vi-onary writer-director Guillermo del Toro boasts ages of both shocking horror and stark, elemen- beauty. In the dark days just after the Spanish vil War, troubled, unwanted young Ofelia (the traordinary Ivana Baquero) copes with awful cir-mstances by escaping into an imaginary dream-nd full of fairies and folk legends that subtly re-ect and refract the trauma of her harsh, y-to-day experiences. In other words, imagine lice suffering under Franco's regime, and falling wn a politically and metaphorically freighted bbit hole into a Wonderland of teeth-gnashing onsters. The underrated auteur behind such eye-pping treats as Blade 2 and Hellboy, del Toro has distinctive personal vision and a unique visual gnature, qualities that for years have gone unher-ded, thanks to the intelligentsia's snooty disdain r the horror genre. Besides offering sights that'll ger long in your dreams, Pan's Labyrinth includes memorably terrifying performance from With a iend Like Harry's Sergi Lopez, and a warm, heroic rn from Y Tu Mamá También star Maribel Verdu. t Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and the suburbs.)

ubborn, foppish legend of stage and screen Peter Toole has found his ideal swan song in Venus, ger Michell's big-hearted and filthy-minded ex-ination of one fussy lion who isn't quite ready r winter. O'Toole gives an extraordinary perfor-nce as a worn-out actor who becomes erotically ated on Jodie Whittaker's vulgar, beer-bellied, -something nursemaid. Their fumbling parody a courtship is fascinating because of all the pat solutions and expected homilies that Michell d screenwriter Hanif Kurieshi so studiously oid. Feeling at times like a rebuttal to the pol-ed cutesiness of those Grumpy Old Men movies, nus has few romantic notions about growing d. The movie is packed with prostate exams, theters and toenail clippings, always forcefully front about the fact that the aging process often nsists of one indignity after another. An early ght gag finds the actor springing from a televi-n studio deathbed, firing up a smoke and hap-y, loudly cursing. It's a blissful little moment at somehow encapsulates this curiously affecting m: lewd misbehavior as a life force. (At Harvard uare and in the suburbs.)

diously devoted to the ugly comic notion that thing's more traumatic than being mistaken for gay man, the latest live-action Disney effort zes bad jokes and panicked homophobia. Falling rs John Travolta, Tim Allen and Martin wrence seem to be surveying the wreckage of eir film careers, thinking back to happier days nen they could headline their own lousy pic-es, instead of having to share the screen on a oss-country motorcycle trip in this shoddily con-ucted City Slickers knock-off. Garishly over-lit, competently directed and rife with unfunny, atological blunders, the movie finds our portly ddle-aged losers in a nonsensical feud with mbone Ray Liotta's rowdy biker gang. A porcine avolta egregiously overacts, his silly doo-rag hid- one of the year's most hilarious hairpieces. len looks bored, and Lawrence seems studiously willing to make eye contact with his fellow per-mers. Leave it to a so-called family entertain-nt to teach children that violence solves every oblem, and that those durned homosexuals sure silly. Wild Hogs is hateful crap. pnotic, confounding and mesmerizing, director vid Fincher's slippery meditation on the San ancisco Bay Area's legendary unsolved murders n experimental art film disguised as a $70 mil-n blockbuster. A swift kick in the teeth to the ial killer genre—which Fincher himself helped eate with his 1995 mindblower Seven—Zodiac o serves as a perverse rebuke to the tidy police ocedurals clogging your TV schedule. With eticulous adherence to historical records, ncher chronicles every infuriating misstep, blind ey and bum lead in a case that didn't get very far t left countless lives ruined in its wake. Mark ffalo delivers a powerhouse performance as a p who can't let go, while Robert Downey Jr. als scenes as a brash, dope-addled crime-beat re-rter drawing the killer's ire. Jake Gyllenhaal is tclassed in such company, playing a geeky car-onist who thinks he can figure it all out alone. ncher combines period-specific filmmaking chniques with cutting-edge digital video pho-graphy to create something eerie and timeless, doggedly insisting that closure is sometimes im-possible and the truth is often just plain unknow-able. Natural Balance

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Not many people can trace their family lineage back 71 generations. But that's the case for Toumani Diabaté, the world's foremost virtuoso of the kora, a 21-stringed West African harp-lute. He comes from a family of griots, the hereditary musicians and oral historians of their people. "We know our history," says Diabaté, whose roots extend to the Mandinka Empire that encompassed all of West Africa 700 years ago. "It's really deep and important, because we are the memory of the empire, and we have the whole archive."

Diabaté also has a foot firmly entrenched in the present. In a first for both a kora player and a griot, he won a Grammy Award for In the Heart of the Moon, a 2005 collaboration with his Malian countryman, the late Ali Farka Toure. And he has recorded with bluesman Taj Mahal, Spanish flamenco-fusion group Ketama, jazz trombonist Roswell Rudd and, most recently, Icelandic pop innovator Björk.

"A griot's job is to make communication," says Diabaté, 41, when a phone connection holds to his home in Bamako, Mali. "I'm always interested in introducing my music to anyone."

Now Diabaté is finally bringing his 15-year-old Symmetric Orchestra to America, including a March 29 concert at the Somerville Theatre. Known for its legendary Friday night sessions at Bamako's outdoor Hogon club, that spirited Afro-pop big band didn't even play outside of Africa until last year's release of Boulevard de L'Independance, a disc that balances rearranged traditional songs with originals.

"One of the spirits of this band is to [musically] rebuild the Mandinka Empire," Diabaté says, "so the musicians from my band, they're originally from different countries of West Africa. The second spirit is the meeting between traditional and modern music, and the last one is the meeting between different generations of musicians."

The group includes 13 musicians from Mali, Senegal, Guinea and the Ivory Coast, supporting vocals with instrumentation from electric guitar, bass and drum kit to the lute-like ngoni and the balafon, a traditional xylophone. "The balance, the fusion, is at a good level," he says. "It's half of the traditional music and half of the modern music, and the kora is in the middle of everything because the kora has different possibilities. It can play accompaniment and it can improvise at the same time."

The result is subtly dazzling as Diabaté's crisply plucked notes evoke the sound of water rippling over rocks. "The music is like a river," he says. "You just drink what you need to drink and get out. The music is like that. When you start to play the music, you cannot finish with the music. You just play what you have to play and of course you will bring something [to it] that nobody has been doing before."

Nobody had ever made a solo kora album until Diabaté made Kaira at age 21, showcasing his bold, broad approach to the instrument. "My father was the one who started to play the kora that way," he says of Sidiki Diabaté, the "King of the Kora" who performed in Mali's prestigious Ensemble National Instrumental with Toumani's mother, the singer Nene Koita.

A prodigy who started on the kora at age 5 and made his public debut at 13, Diabaté heard his father on the radio, but never received lessons. "When I was at the beginning, he didn't really get the time for me," says Diabaté, who honed his skills during late nights he spent practicing at home. "The music was destiny for me, a present from God."

"I was listening not only to traditional music, but also different music everywhere, to give it my own experience," he says, citing Jimi Hendrix, Otis Redding and James Brown, whose onetime sideman Pee Wee Ellis added horn arrangements to Boulevard. But when Diabaté picks up his instrument, it all winds back to his cultural base.

Toumani Diabate feels a spiritual connection to kora-based music.

"When I play, I just put my Mandinka sound on it," he says. "The guitar playing by Taj Mahal is always singing the blues note. If you see U2, the guitar is always playing the rock 'n' roll song. The kora is always playing the Mandinka song."

For audiences about to experience the Symmetric Orchestra for the first time, Diabaté says, "If you like to listen to this music, you can listen. If you want to dance, it's music to dance to, and if you want to meditate, it's music you can do that to also. It's real music. It's natural music. It's music from the heart." iB

Toumani Diabaté and the Symmetric Orchestra play the Somerville Theatre March 29.

IMPROPER sightings

UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Jared Fogle agreed to pose for a photo with the IMPROPER on a recent trip to New York City, but only after we agreed to stop our inquiries into the mysterious disappearance of Clay Henry.

Michael Colanti and Cristina Scranton set across Thailand's Ping River on a bamboo raft on their way toward the Titleist Basin and, eventually, Top Flight Bay.

Miles Leong and Chi Chi Wu checked out the Yuyuan Garden in Shanghai. It's a place of peace, comfort and, in Miles' case, being totally gnarly.

Alexandra and Steve Loukanaris visited Grand Cayman's Seven Mile Beach. A block over is Eight Mile Beach, which is known for excessive violence and rap battles.

Olmedo, Judy Barahona, Tonio and Steve Ware were at Panama's Embera village. The Embera have no last names or a "written" language. Kinda like Cher.

Paul Hodes and Carol Shea-Porter, U.S. representatives from New Hampshire, are two of the country's most powerful IMPROPER politicos.

IMPROPER BOUNTY

BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER: Wearing an "I'm With Stupid" T-shirt at the annual St. Stupid's Day Festival, held April 1 in San Francisco, Calif.

Send high-resolution digital photos (at least 500K file size) to sightings@improper.com, or mail professionally printed color photos (min. 3x5) to: Improper Sightings, The Improper Bostonian Magazine, 142 Berkeley St., 3rd floor, Boston, MA 02116. Please include the exact photo location, full names of all people in the photo, your phone number and e-mail address. All photos become the property of THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN MAGAZINE and will not be returned. Ink-jet or laser-printed photos cannot be accepted.

Some May Say I'm a Dreamer...

Are there any faithful women out there? Is it really that hard to "stand by your man"? I'd like to find a woman who knows the true meaning of love—someone who doesn't judge a book by its cover and is looking for a sweet, passionate lover. So, can you see holding hands, walking on the beach, toes in the sand? Are you out there?
—A Good Catch

Take Out the Papers and the Trash

To the spoiled brat in my apartment: Even though you're new to my university, I'm quite certain you can figure out how to take the trash out. In case you're confused, let me walk you through the steps. First, remove the bag from the trash can. Tie and carry it down the hall to the elevator. Descend to the first floor and hang a sharp left. The trash room should be waiting there, hungry for our rubbish. Leave the bag there. It's easy, I promise. See, the thing is, I really don't appreciate coming back from a long weekend at home to find a pile of trash bags sitting in the kitchen. Honestly, I could smell our room from down the hall. Let's never let this happen again. 'K? Thanks.
—Disgruntled

Users Are Losers

This is just an F.Y.I. for the three young male T riders on Feb. 22 who were sharing too much information about their lives with the entire Blue Line car—including the families with young children. It's beyond me why a drunk-ass skank boy has to share with everyone that his minimum wage job won't score him a line of drugs that day, or that he should have spent the day selling oxy tabs that were offered to him, or the very graphic description of his last visit to a jail cell. Yes, we all found this very interesting as you weaved back and forth in a drunken stupor, babbling and entertaining your fan club the entire length of our MBTA trip. I'm not sure what purpose it served, other than to teach the kids on board to say no to drugs.
—A Disgusted Observer

Who Do You Think You Are, Tom Brady?

To L.J.W.: It was sad that you got your second wife pregnant before you were even divorced from the first one. It was heinous that you had an affair with a coworker while your second wife was pregnant. It was even more so when you walked out on a 1-month-old and a 4-year-old to chase the woman you were having the affair with. It was stupid to quit your job, because she then broke up with you. It was doubly heinous to put your next girlfriend/victim out on the street without any money or a place to live. (Paying for one night in a hotel doesn't cut it. She had to sleep in her car.) Now you're back at it and sleeping with a woman at work. Some people never learn. You are the most selfish man ever to hit the planet. You're teaching your kids that people are disposable. I hope that one day they'll dispose of you, and the pain and heartache you've caused so many will come back to haunt you.
—Shocked and Appalled

Battle of the Bad Days

After I missed my Orange Line train, you were the only person who bothered to acknowledge my hissy fit and asked if I was having a bad day. You then shared your story of unlucky occurrences. And while your day seemed significantly worse than mine, I was touched that you chose to confide in me. Good luck with all your troubles; I hope everything turns around for you.
—Miss Fortunate

Your Presence Is Not Requested

To the uninvited guest: After five minutes in your presence, I already disliked you and your miserable attitude—which is exactly why you weren't invited in the first place. Anyway, why would you want to come to a birthday dinner for someone you aren't even friends with? I know it's because you like his roommate. Well, he must have known better since he didn't go home with you. Oh, and for the record: Edamame is a soybean pod. It doesn't contain "edamame beans." You really didn't have to be so rude about it, especially since you were wrong; kind of like those shoes with your outfit.
—Less-Than-Thrilled Party Planner

Quit Coworking Your Game

Dear New Guy at Work: I'm sorry to be so cold to you all the time. I know you like me, but I don't think you're charming when you call me "sweetheart" or hang around my station all the time; it just rubs me the wrong way. I know what it's like to be the new kid and want to fit in, so I apologize for being mean, but I have a boyfriend and you creep me out.
—An Actual Nice Girl

Smooth Operator

To one kind T conductor: We were lost in Allston, exhausted from a long day of ice skating. My CharlieTicket had run out, and my friend didn't have any single dollar bills. I gazed longingly at the Prudential Center, knowing it was that much farther to my home. Our transportation options seemed slim: either take a cab or endure an epic walk in the freezing cold. Right at that moment, a train pulled into the Harvard Ave. station. We took our chances, despite not having the right amount of money. The line was long, and people crammed onto the train. I anxiously watched the girl in front of me slide quarters into the machine. Moments later, it was my turn. You turned to me and said, "Don't worry about it." I could hardly believe my luck; you saved us from a cold or expensive trip across the city. I wanted to thank you for your kindness!
—A Grateful T Rider

Can't We All Just Get Along?

I just wanted to shout out to my future roommate: J.T.R., I really appreciate your willingness to share a living space with me. I'm aware of my eccentricities and tendency to make you uncomfortable. Still, I suspect that our eight months together will be unforgettable. I look forward to many a belligerent conversation and our Lord of the Rings Monopoly competition. Cheers!

rockie horoscope

MARCH 21 – APRIL 3, 2007 BY ROCKIE GARDINER

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

To belittle or not to belittle—that is the question. That's what the Ram should be asking while your acerbic Mars ruler confronts Saturn's tedious regulations. Because your irrepressible curiosity opposes that immovable mindset only once every two years, decide whether you need to make a dramatic scene or whether Father Time will provide a solution. Also this week, a matter of faith bordering on fanaticism—in your team or a charismatic leader—can get blown way out of proportion.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

No matter what's going on outside your door or in your head, you can take comfort in the fact that your Venus ruler has come home to roost. With the goddess comfortably lodged in Taurus, you won't encounter many problems you can't charm your way out of. This includes resolving any mixed feelings about actively pursuing a career goal or fulfilling a family obligation that would give you great satisfaction. Although the odds seem stacked in favor of the gig and the glamour that surrounds it, remember: It's a perception, not a sure thing.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

So much for clarity—i.e., the weeks that your Mercury ruler spent steeped in the rational Aquarian thought process. Now that the Messenger has reentered supersensitive Pisces, the sign that governs the people you answer to, decide which role you should take up now: the rebellious artist, the innovative technocrat or the bridge over troubled waters. Once you realize that reasonable behavior is no longer appropriate, let alone appreciated, navigating your way through the chaos at work shouldn't be that big a deal.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

The recent Pisces new moon/solar eclipse could've shown you how a Moon Child can control a scene by force of personality alone. You didn't have to raise your voice or promise the moon; you simply had to be your own hyperaware self. Understanding the historical roots and present-day intricacies of a situation, as well as sensing how the people involved will react, is an innate gift you must not take for granted. By the way, try to avoid getting dragged into a tug-of-war between two opposing financial interests.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Even if she's not calling the shots, as long as Venus is at the top of your solar chart, a woman will figure prominently in your life. For some, she'll be a client or boss; for others, a bossy relative. If you're lucky, art will replace gender and you'll happily call yourself a slave to it. The arrival of spring (i.e., your sun ruler's entrance into daring Aries) brings a full month of benefits to Lions, lying in wait for the fulfillment of a promise made while Mercury was retrograde in your Aquarius house of significant others.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

The last thing a health-conscious Virgo needs to read is "attend to your bodily concerns." Nevertheless, while Mars, ruler of infections and injections, joins forces with imaginative but occasionally delusional Neptune in your Aquarius house of health, you're liable to convince yourself that you're sick. You could also misinterpret the signs of an illness or become so inundated with information that you overreact. And because your Mercury ruler is in Pisces, the sign ruled by Neptune, these tendencies become magnified.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

Bring on the crowds, or at least a few more folks than the one or two you've been focused on. Now that your sociable Venus ruler is in sensual Taurus, the pragmatic earth sign it also governs, you could crave a wider range of people and pleasurable experiences; you could also recognize their potential for profitability. Remember that there's still plenty of activity in your Aquarius house of romance, recreation and risk, although the riskiest thing might be to fall for the fantasy that glamorous Neptune is offering.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

A cherished ideal you've held about family—or, more likely, the houses you've lived in—could become a much bigger deal when your energetic Mars coruler meets up with visionary Neptune. Enough daydreaming about how things might be; Mars will provide the motivation to make these pictures materialize. Should you encounter opposition from a stodgy source, such as grandpa, assertive Mars will attack that as well. Make the most of any opportunity that arises; it'll be another two years before the Warrior visits your domain again.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

Gather your most cogent arguments before challenging a long-standing tradition or, just as likely, a tenured professor. The biannual opposition between courageous Mars and calcified Saturn takes place across your axis of education and communication. But if you're not an academic and you have no axe to grind, then you might experience their problematic polarity when you're on the road or on your computer. Even if push does come to shove, this time around neither outcome will take a measurable toll on you.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Keeping the dream alive (and making it pay off) may be the hardest thing you've had to do in a while. Because macho Mars is opposing your cautious Saturn ruler, there's a chance that the atmosphere surrounding a financial matter will become strident. But once the God of War enters empathetic Pisces on Good Friday, all will be, if not completely forgiven, at least forgotten for a while. The fantasy (Neptune in Aquarius) will regain its premier position, and you'll continue to dream up ways to spend the money—when you finally get it.

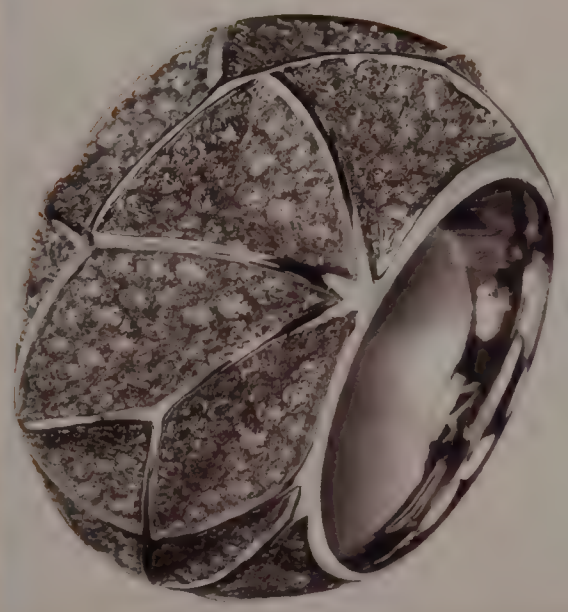
AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

Take the time to scan the entire column for references to Mars and Neptune in Aquarius to learn how this dynamic duo will affect assorted signs. Also, see if Saturn in Leo is curbing anyone else's (besides your partner's) style. Since confrontation seems to be the order of the day, you might prefer to give your partner the upper hand while you remain secure in the knowledge that having macho Mars in your sign will kick anybody's ass. Partial solar eclipse notwithstanding, now is a pretty good time for a new financial venture.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19



This is another of those periods when the Fish and the Water Bearer are on a similar course. That's because energetic Mars is adding oomph to your Neptune ruler as together they transit Aquarius. If you're athletic, you'll benefit from the surge of Mars' physical power; if you're artistic, then Martian single-mindedness can help achieve an aesthetic goal. In either case, even an innocent bystander may have to deal with, and more likely ward off, the restrictions Saturn has devised to impede your progress. Use the annual Pisces new moon to start something new.

BROWNSTONE *111 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142 www.irishconnection.com*Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and the elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features creative, comfort cuisine. Favorites include the chicken lollipops, tartare trio, short rib pot roast and pan seared haddock. On weekends, Chef Michael McEwen turns out "late-night" cuisine until 1:30 a.m., featuring midnight snacks of fritto misto, baked fondue and pancakes and eggs from the brunch menu. Brownstone is open seven days a week from 11 a.m. – 2 a.m., serving brunch on Saturday and Sunday from 10 a.m. – 3 p.m.

THE BLACK ROSE 160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286. www.irishconnec tion.com. Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall-Quincy market area of Boston and is known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef and of course, Mother Sweeney's corned beef, a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself. For thirty years, The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftains, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

THE PURPLE SHAMROCK 1 Union Street, Boston, 617-227-2060. www.irishconnection. com. Located on the freedom trail across from Boston City Hall on Union Street. The Purple Shamrock is the perfect place to stop by and have a bite to eat. LAST SCENE HERE

THE ONLY ONE MISSING WAS P.T. BARNUM...

The pre–face-lift socialites and yummy mummies were out in full force (and full furs) on a snowy Sunday afternoon for the Boys and Girls Clubs' annual benefit, "Look, Ma! No Hands!"

A fundraiser to help kids run away and join the circus, the intergenerational afternoon was held at the new Convention Center, where the huge buckets of water collected from the leaky roof were put to good use in filling a dunking booth manned by Patriot Tedy Bruschi. For the adults, there was a martini luge, which one woman said "reminds me of being a sorority pledge and doing the walk of shame across the quad." For the kids, there were hands-on lessons in circus skills like knife-throwing, lion-taming, and the etiquette of elephant-waste disposal.

Present and accounted for: celebrity ringmaster Uma Thurman, cochairs Maud Cabot and Betsy Gifford, latter-day June Cleaver Leigh Weatherly and her son, Hunter, PR powerhouses Kate Shamon (with son Matthew) and Wendy Pierce (with Jack and Elizabeth), nightlife kingpin Patrick Lyons and his queen, Kristina (with their royal offspring, Lucy and Wyatt), TV producer Lisa Pierpont (towing Langley and Gemma), Molly Dunne (with Mimi and Spencer), the fashion triumvirate of Rachael Goldfarb, Lori Sidman and Maggie Gold-Seelig—whose kids, ironically, were off on a playdate elsewhere—and a woman whom many took to be Joan Collins (in town for her recent stage appearance) but who turned out to be Tudor Investments behemoth Jim Pallotta in drag.

Despite a spinal-cord injury sustained in the "Trapeze Without a Net" demonstration, the event went off without a hitch (and a spokesperson for Children's Hospital swears the injured child is doing "just fine").

Besides, as one woman pointed out, "Being physically disabled doesn't have to be a handicap, you know. Some of the better schools practically require it."

At the Museum of Science: Ann and Mitt Romney

DARWINISM, SCHMARWINISM...

It wasn't your usual Cambridge crowd when the Museum of Science opened its latest exhibition—Creationism and Intelligent Design—with a cocktail party beneath a big white tent, hosted by the show's sponsors, the Discovery Institute and the National Association of Evangelicals.

The invitation said "interdenominational and all-inclusive," which was reflected in the choice of the evening's honorees: the Rev. Ted Haggard, who took the opportunity to "thank the good Lord I can't get married in this state, because I'm heterosexual… and I'm also already married," and almost-lifelike presidential hopeful Mitt Romney (with his wife, Ann), who accepted the crystal chimpanzee statuette with the jest, "One thing we Mormons and you other Christians can agree on is that if I'm descended from an ape, I'll be a monkey's uncle!"

This and other witty persiflage elicited appreciative chortles from such distinguished guests as cardinal Sean O'Malley, state senator Scott Brown, poster children for concerned parents David and Tonia Parker and Rob and Robin Wirthlin of Lexington, political pundit Ann Coulter, newly appointed Harvard president Drew Gilpin Faust (looking a bit baffled), and a woman who said, "Answer me this: If there's no God, then explain my shoes. They're heavenly!"

The evening's entertainment included a snake-handling demonstration and some good, old-fashioned scientific faith healing, which prompted one male guest to mutter, "No offense, but if it involves touching, I'd prefer if Haggard wasn't involved."

ONCE ERIN GOES BRAGH, SHE'LL NEVER GO BACK...

In case there was any question that affirmative action has gone too far, the American Ireland Fund held its annual black-tie gala—"We're a Minority, Too, Y'know!"—at the Four Seasons.

The dress code was "disenfranchised chic," and among the guests were Hill Holliday honcho Jack Connors, CJP jefe Barry Shrage, PR powerhouse George Regan, Thurston Howell III look-alike Bob Crowe, Channel 4 anchor babe Lisa Hughes and her other half, Mike Casey, tech mogul Bob Davis, both Frank McCourts—the best-selling author and the construction mogul—comedian Steve Sweeney, and the no-longer New Kids on the Block Joey McIntyre and Donnie Wahlberg, who upped the celebrity quotient by a magnitude of several.

Because the event was a benefit for Irish immigrants hoping to improve their prospects in this country by passing themselves off as members of more put-upon minority groups, the evening supported such educational programs as "Dressing Gay on $10 a Day," "From County Kerry to Cuban Refugee in Three Easy Lessons" and "Why You Should Only Pretend to Be Jewish if You Want to Go Into Real Estate or Medicine."

Celebrity emcee Lenny Clarke did his usual superb job in auctioning off such items as plastic surgery to have an epicanthic fold put on the winner's eyelids and a weekend stay at the Nantucket home of Teresa Heinz and John "I just found out I'm half-Jewish" Kerry.

Following coffee and dessert, there were samba and hip-hop lessons to make guests look less white on the dance floor, and overall, everyone seemed to enjoy themselves thoroughly, especially the woman who said, "My husband has what's called the Irish curse, if you know what I mean, so any way for him to be more African-American is alright with me."

Oh, and by the way… April Fools'. IB

FROM THE EDITOR

BACK TO FENWAY

For many Bostonians, the start of baseball season is hands down the best thing about spring. To celebrate that happy occasion, we've added to this issue our own special guide to Red Sox Nation '07—four pages of banter and important info (learn how to say "Yankees suck" in Japanese!), plus a full-page Red Sox schedule to clip out and post on your fridge or cubicle wall.

Staffer Rich Levine's interview with young gun Jonathan Papelbon, who made our spring by posing for the cover while down in Fort Myers, is the highlight of our coverage. Fresh from the announcement that management would again turn to him as closer, Papelbon talks about that decision, his arm—and life off the mound.

When the team's on the road, you'll b watching from the couch, and now's the time to get your apartment in shape. Th rest of our issue offers tips for making your home your palace.

REVERE'S RETORT

Apparently, graduating magna cum laude from a major university doesn't prevent someone from speaking like a moron. I showed my 16-year-old daughter Ms. Banks' comment about our hometown of Revere (Soroff/On, March 21) because she is (was) a true fan. Her reaction was, "what a mean thing to say." I, on the other hand, never miss an opportunity to call it like I see it. Elizabeth Banks is a very pretty d—bag. I've been to her hometown, and if god were to give the earth an enema he would stick the business end of it in Pittsfield.

ALBANIANS JUST WANT TO HAVE FUN

Thank you for publishing such a nice and funny article about my country ("Albania Mania," March 21). Ezra Dyer's conclusion about Albanians' being specific in their proverbs made me laugh. I'm a physician working at MGH and always enjoy smart, informative and funny articles regarding my country. I'm not just returning the favor here, but I'm so grateful to the city of Boston and to this country for everything I've achieved in these three years. And of course for having great local writers who improve Albania's image.

NEW IN TOWN

Chopsticks and Cha-Cha-Cha

There's something fishy going on in the back lobby of the InterContinental Boston. Fluorescent light panels throbbing to insistent salsa beats scream caliente Havana nightclub. Backlit shelves showcasing tequilas and sleek-lined chairs and tables spell hip Nuevo Latino eatery. A touch of guacamole, perhaps? Some hot tostones? Not here. It's a… sushi bar?

Sushi Teq, installed into a tiny space about 10 feet from the hotel's Provençal brasserie (Miel) and slated to open mid-April, gets its name from its two core wares: sushi and tequila. But those expecting a blurring of Latin and Asian cultures reminiscent of Manhattan's Sushi Samba are in for a surprise. While the 69 high-end tequilas are meant to pair nicely with the raw-fish offerings, there's no crossover to speak of. "We don't want to do fusion," says Jean-Pierre Etcheberrigaray (spelled just like it sounds), the InterCon's vice president of food and beverages for the Americas. "Fusion creates confusion."

Indeed, the menu trades on straightforward preparations of raw fish and maki one might find at any sushi joint in town. Maki-roll prices stay mostly in the single digits—for instance, the Philadelphia (smoked salmon, cream cheese, cucumbers and scallions, $7) and the caterpillar (eel, cucumber, avocado and flying-fish roe, $9)—while the more intricate signature rolls run somewhat higher. Of course, the chef's working plenty hard for the extra cash: The 510 ($14), for one, is an inventive, mind-spinning mélange of white fish, yuzu (a sour citrus fruit), cilantro and salmon roe served atop an inside-out roll of avocado, cucumber, flying-fish roe, asparagus, jalapeño, shiso (a minty Asian herb) and soy.

But not nearly as mind-spinning as the vibe. One step through the double-tall glass doors begins a salsa-addled trip of colors and pulsating rhythms. It's like a modular Mondrian grid painting circa 1930 reimagined as a psychedelic amusement-park ride à la Disney's Space Mountain. Adding to the trippy effect, barmen clad in cabana shirts groove to the cha-cha-cha and merengue beats, pouring stiff riffs on the tequila theme.

Whimsical menu descriptions help you choose your premium poison. In the mood for a shot of Don Julio Blanco ($12), redolent of wildflowers, or the orange creamsicle notes of the Sol Dios Platinum ($10)? How about a splurge-worthy glass of Herradura Selección Suprema ($64), prized for its hints of raisins and tobacco? Those who can't stomach the stuff straight-up will find plenty of fruit-blended options to keep the ride on the smooth side. Frozen drinks (like the Sweet Ginger Honey Guava, laced with Milagro Blanco tequila) go for $12 a glass—or for $48 a pitcher—with shaken cocktails for $11. If the psychedelia doesn't sweep you up, this ruthless drink menu surely will. Sushi Teq, InterContinental Boston, 510 Atlantic Ave., Boston (617-747-1000). —Jolyon Helterman

INNER VIEW

Funny Farm

Simon Rich, a recent Harvard graduate, isn't your average 20-something. With a collection of comic essays, Ant Farm, out this month, an East Coast book tour and props from the likes of Jon Stewart, he's living many a young (and old) writer's dream. He's in town to discuss his book April 9 at the Harvard Coop.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: Were you always funny?

Simon Rich: People always laughed at me, and I guess some still do. I think it comes out more in my writing because usually I'm too socially afraid to say anything, let alone anything funny.

IB: Do you think Bostonians have a sense of humor?

SR: Oh, definitely. People from Boston are really good at making fun of people who go to Harvard. I was impressed at how hard they could stick it to you.

IB: How did you come up with Ant Farm*'s essay ideas?*

SR: I was writing some of my jokes one day, about two years ago, and I realized that they all had a similar theme. So I decided to put them all together.

IB: What's the theme?

SR: All the essays are basically about being terrified and the experience of feeling doomed, in small and big ways.

IB: You mention middle school in a lot in your essays—that's terrifying! What's your most humiliating memory from that time in your life?

SR: I don't even know where to begin. The sheer number of video games I played tells a lot about my popularity.

IB: Are you a loner?

SR: Why? Do you want to be my friend?

IB: Maybe! What are you going to do now that you've graduated?

SR: I have no idea. I know I'm going to keep living with my mom at her apartment in New York, where I am now. It's paradise on earth. My room is exactly how I left it, with all my comic books and children's books.

IB: So how did you get your own grown-up book published?

SR: You might not be so impressed when you see how short it is! Notice the big font and blank pages in the back to make it look longer.

IB: Jon Stewart was impressed. How's that feel?

SR: It's totally surreal and nuts. —Leslie P. Kilgore

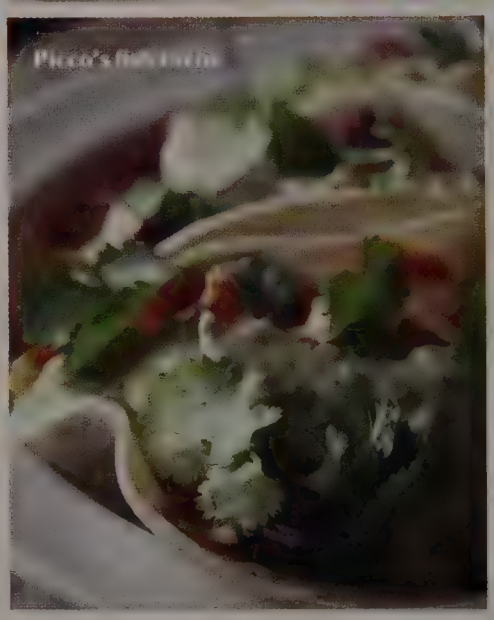
TASTY TIDBITS



Get Your Noodle Fix

Slurps Away… Italian restaurants, steakhouses, seafood specialists? You can't throw a baseball in Boston without hitting one. But noodle shops? Aside from a few Vietnamese pho places, not so much. That makes the British-born chain Wagamama's arrival at Faneuil Hall April 23, in the spot that used to house Rustic Kitchen, something of a novelty. (It's also the company's very first U.S. location.) Wagamama has a cult following in London—expat Gwyneth Paltrow has even been known to dine there. Inexpensive food that's heavy on the noodles and ramen soups (starting at $9), speedy service, fresh juices (plus sake, beer and wine) and communal seating at long tables are among the restaurant's hallmarks. And if you had to guess where a savvy UK company would plant its second Boston-area outpost? That's right, Harvard Square, in July. 200 Quincy Market, Boston (617-778-2440); 50 JFK St., Cambridge. www.wagamama.us.

Feed the Fans… Anyone who's joined the hungry/thirsty throngs at the restaurants near Fenway on game day would agree that demand for sustenance during such high-traffic times tops supply. So we were glad to hear that a new 280-seat (including a 60-seat patio) spot is joining the fray. Suburban outpost Burtons Grill opened its first city location March 27 just behind Fenway Park at the Shops at Trilogy. The menu covers the basics, from salads and sandwiches ($7–$13) to burgers, steaks and seafood ($11.50–$29), and the atmosphere is upscale casual. And of course there's a bar, where baseball fans can indulge their second-favorite pastime. The Shops at Trilogy, 1363 Boylston St., Boston (617-236-2236). www.burtonsgrill.com.

Go Fish… As was previously reported in these pages, South Enders got their knickers in a twist this winter when local joint Picco dropped a certain item from its small but perfect menu. Now those beloved $12 haddock tacos are back, and certainly by popular demand. As Picco manager Moira Murphy tells us, "We'd been getting so many questions about the tacos that when I was updating the menu online, I wanted to put up a big scrolling banner announcing their return." 513 Tremont St., Boston (617-927-0066). www.piccorestaurant.com.

Up to Coda… The Back Bay burger scene took a hit last spring with the closing of Tim's Bar and Grill on Columbus Ave., but the space won't be vacant too much longer. Jim Cochener and Michael Moxley (who own Common Ground in Allston) plan to reopen the spot in early May as Coda Bar and Kitchen. The restaurant will hold 60 diners and feature a selection of comfort foods like grilled free-range chicken, braised short ribs and, of course, the Tim's Burger. "We've got their old burger recipe," Moxley tells us, "so we'll do our best to re-create that legendary item." 329 Columbus Ave., Boston. www.codaboston.com. —Rich Levine and Veronica Chao

A good boutique is like a great closet—a cute-as-can-be outfit is only a hanger away. Think of Velvet Ribbon as your dream wardrobe. Stocked with basics that are anything but, owner Nicole Pham has filled the shop with finds from labels that'll take you from day to night, looking pretty all the while. Tops, trousers and dresses from Robert Rodriguez, Shin Choi, Rory Beca, Susana Monaco and Poleci offer a mix of preppy essentials, party-girl faves and tailored pieces with a twist. (Prices run from $60 to $375.) We love the silver, starfish-accented T-shirts and pants by Tailor New York as well as the Pucci-inspired prints from Trina Turk. Other products include celeb-coveted–soy wax "A Scent of Scandal" candles, with names like "Tighty Whites" (smells like fresh laundry) and "Two-Timer" (chocolate and vanilla); Alex Woo's organic jewelry designs; and quilted MZ Wallace bags. The dressing rooms feel spacious, with flattering light and lush curtains. Painted wooden tables, a decorative fireplace, iron and shell chandeliers, a sprinkling of pretty mirrors and, of course, velvet ribbons round out the look. Velvet Ribbon, 1620 Beacon St., Brookline (617-277-0066). www.vribbonboutique.com

IMPROPER REPORTS

A Drink by Any Other Name

You can do better than celebrate the Sox's new pitcher with a can of Sapporo. Specialty items honoring Daisuke Matsuzaka's Japanese roots are turning up on menus around town. Perhaps more clever than the mix of ingredients are the attempts to incorporate his name into the dish.

Ben and Jerry's
174 Newbury St., Boston (617- 536-5456).
Teetotalers and health nuts, here's the drink for you. The Dice-K Smoothie blends Japanese green tea and lemonade sorbet ($5). Say om.

Douzo
131 Dartmouth St., Boston (617-859-8885).
Sake was bound to get some serious play. Get your fix with the Matsuzaka Martini, a combination of Grey Goose citron vodka, house sake, green tea liqueur and cranberry juice, with a half-sugared rim ($9.95). A Daisuke roll, made with soft-shell crab and topped with tuna ($16.20), presents the perfect pairing.

Fugakyu
1280 Beacon St., Brookline (617-734-1268).
The Matsuzaka frenzy menu covers all the bases. Featured drinks include the Matsuzaka Martini—vanilla vodka, crème de cacao and Godiva white chocolate liqueur ($8). Equally upscale: the Matsuzaka maki roll, featuring lobster tail, asparagus, black tobikko and wasabi mayo ($18).

The Metropolitan Club
1210 Boylston St., Boston (617-731-0600).
This themed tasting menu ($30, adult; $20, children)—available all month as part of the Met's weekly Sunday Supper special—further heralds Dice-K's arrival. Entrées, including miso salmon and teriyaki tenderloin, accompany hand-picked wines.

The Ritz-Carlton—Jer-ne
10 Avery St., Boston (617-574-7100).
Forget the Flirttini. This season baseball babes will look cool with the Ritz's Dice-K-Tini: three parts vodka, one part passion fruit purée, one part sake and pickled ginger, complete with red "dice" kubes ($16). —Amanda Knorr

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

All Grown Up... Alison Barnard, owner of the North End boutique Injeanius, has opened a second shop right down the street. If Injeanius is the girl next door (casual in everyday wear), then Twilight is her older sister: still spunky, but ready for a board room or a five-star dinner. "My customers kept telling me they needed a place to buy dressy clothes and there was nowhere in the area for them to go," Barnard says. With dresses by Nicole Miller and Betsey Johnson, "work appropriate" collections by adam+eve and Rachel Pally, bags by Botkier and clutches by Solas (with a battery-operated LED bulb inside), dressing the part just got a whole lot easier. 12 Fleet St., Boston (617-523-8008). www.twilightboutique.com.

South of the Border... Add another stop to the South End's ever-expanding boutique crawl. Diseño Home Furnishings, the SoWa district's newest spot, brings a bit of South American chic to Boston. The shop combines contemporary designs from the streets of Rio, São Paulo and Montevideo with authentic textiles from Peru and Bolivia. Leather sofas from Mendoza, animal skins from the pampas of Argentina and wood pieces from Brazil caught our attention, along with suede throws, lighting and other accent items. And the motif extends beyond the merchandise. Owner Frank Campanale, a South End local and seasoned traveler, gives customers a reason to linger with a coffee bar, Latin-infused jazz and plasma TVs for watching soccer and Carnival. 409 Harrison Ave., Boston (617-423-2008). www.disenoboston.com.

Green Teeth... Saving the earth one mouth at a time: That's Waltham-based Recycline's new mantra. To mark its fifth year providing consumer products made with recycled plastics, the company teamed with Stonyfield Yogurt to bring the conscientious consumer a new ergonomic toothbrush. Called Preserve, the toothbrush, itself recycleable, is made with—you guessed it—recycled yogurt cups (2 million cups have been recycled so far). A greener globe and fresh breath—now that's something to smile about. (888-354-7296). www.recycline.com.

Ladies Who Lunge... South Enders now have a leg up, thanks to the new adult classes at the Topf's Center for Dance Education. Topf's has expanded its repertoire beyond its 33-year-old "youth professional" program to reach a wider demographic. "We wanted to offer more for the changing South End community and hope to become a center for the neighborhood and its families," president and CEO Richard Rein says. Serving both the working and the diaper sets, the revamped schedule features a 50-minute butt, legs and abs "luncheon workout"; a 10 am dance class that varies between hip-hop, ballet, modern and jazz; a Tuesday-night belly dancing session; and several ethnic, creative-movement and youth options for parents and their little ones. Classes cost $12 each or $110 for a 10-lesson card. 551 Tremont St., Boston (617-482-0351).

THE BIG O'EASY

If you think St. Patty's Day is wild in Boston, try New Orleans.

Sometime soon after New Year's, I get a phone call from my brother-in-law, Rick. He asks what I'm doing March 15–18. "Pretending like I'm Irish as an excuse to get really drunk," I reply. "Damn straight," he says. But this year, I'd be celebrating my fake Irish heritage not in Southie, but in New Orleans.

Rick and his friends make an annual St. Patty's Day trip to New Orleans, and now that I'm family I get the invite. Also on board this year is my other brother-in-law, David. By the end of the weekend, after much tormenting on the subject, Rick will be introducing us as "the guys who are banging my sisters." I'm sure he's happy he invited us.

I realize pretty quickly that this group sets high standards for debauchery. The first guy I meet is Rick's ex-roommate, a lawyer who once pulled a gun on Rick because he was taking too long in the shower. Jovial yet menacing, he reminds me of a cross between Rodney Dangerfield and Hunter S. Thompson. On the subject of bad strip club experiences, he recalls once waking up in the morning, looking at his receipt and discovering that the previous night's festivities set him back $4,000.

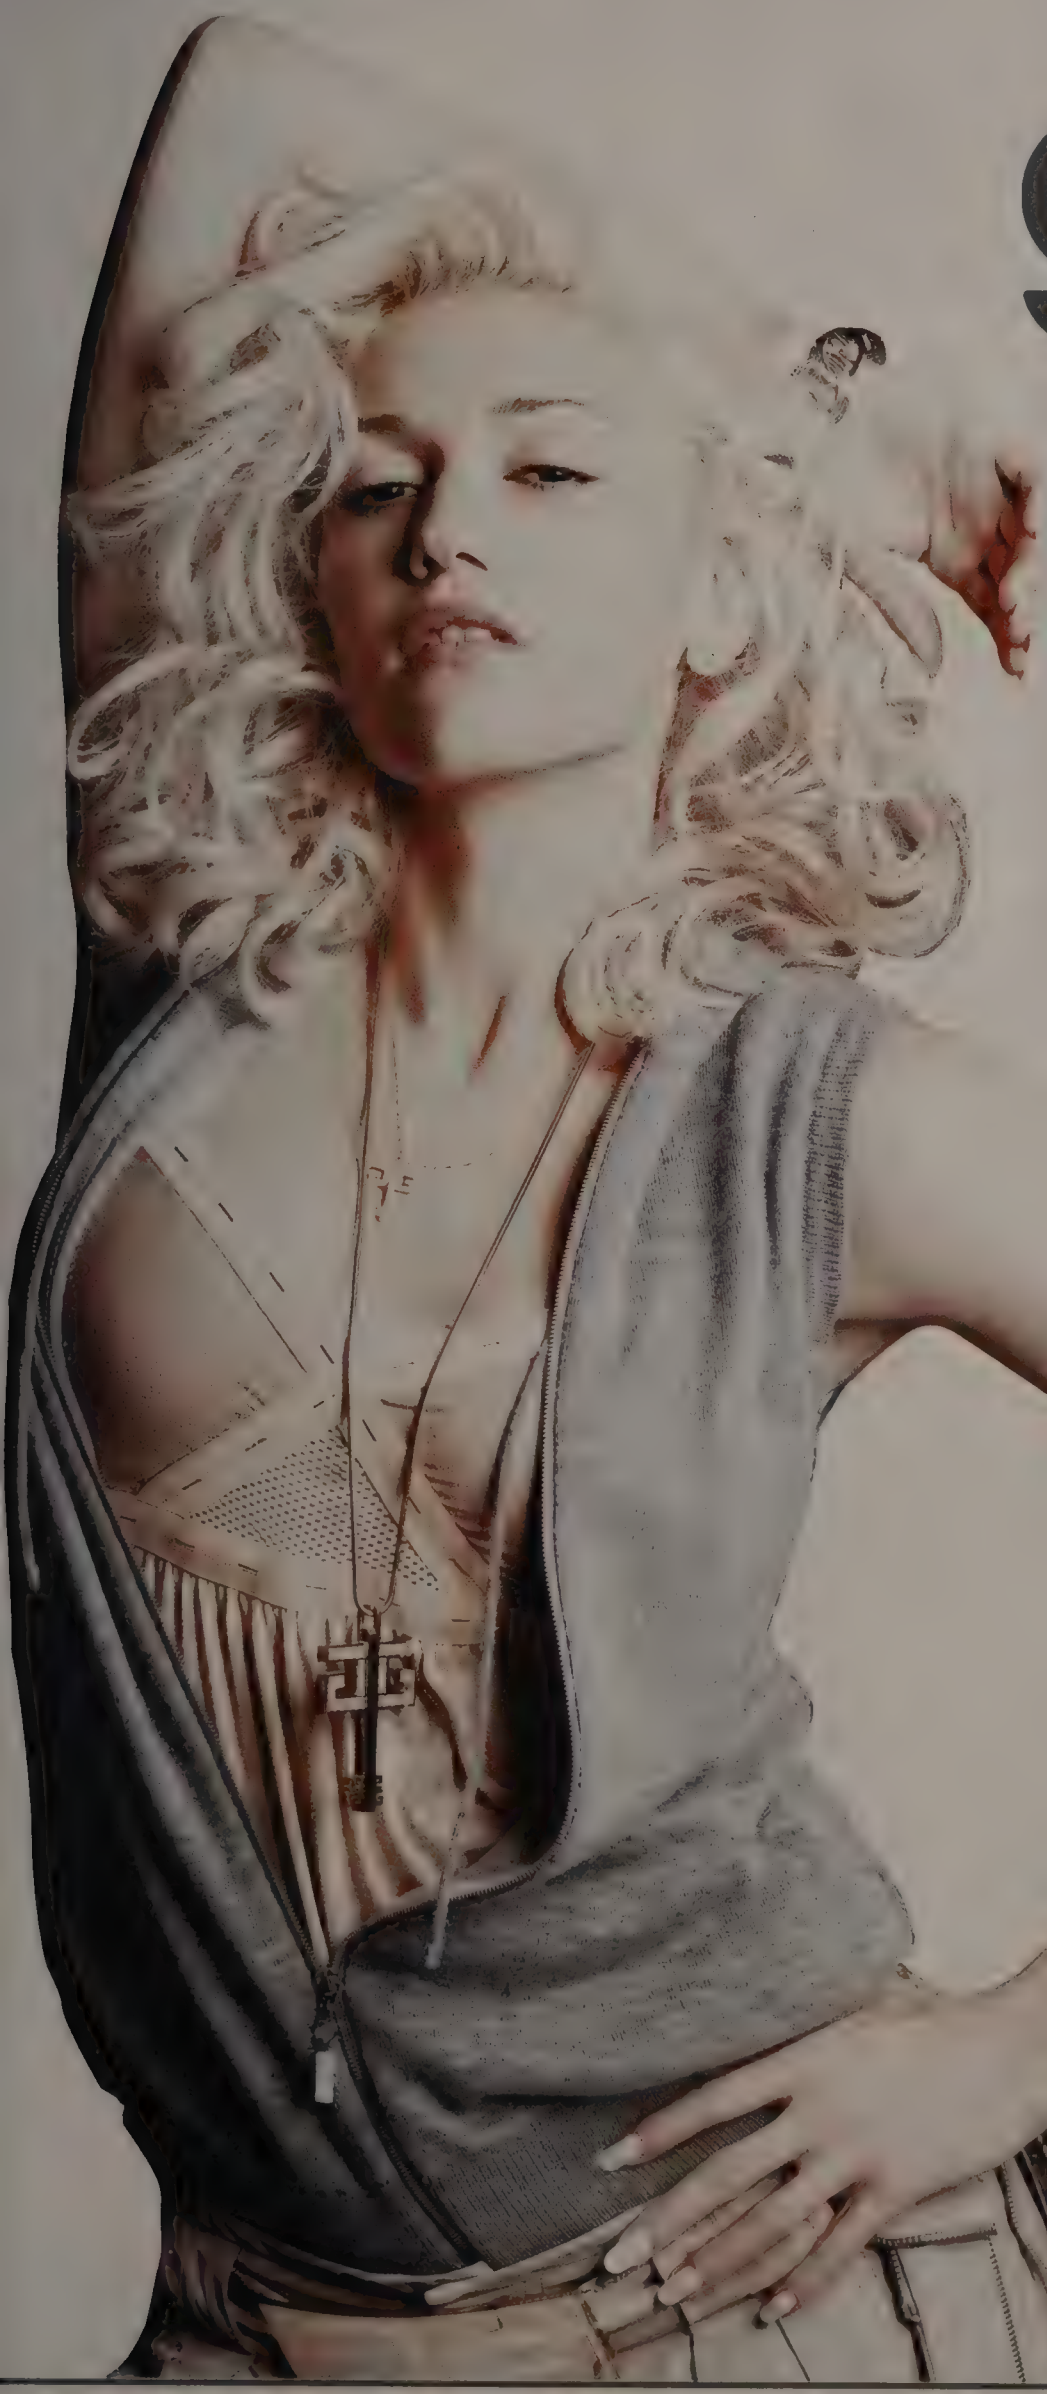
There's another friend who can't make it this year. It seems he recently got arrested for a DUI and, at the hoosegow, used his one phone call to dial 911 and report that he'd been kidnapped by the police. Apparently, the phone rang in the next room. That's the level of stupidity that these guys are capable of bringing to the table.

This group takes lots of trips together. They tell me about the time they went to Paris. Somehow, I have a hard time seeing them in Paris. "We hung out underneath the Eiffel Tower and threw rocks at each other," says Rick's friend Steve. OK, maybe I can see these guys in Paris.

If that's the approach Rick's friends bring to the City of Light, I'm a little apprehensive about what might happen in the City of Blight. I've heard patchwork stories from Rick, and they're mostly about harmless fun, stuff like getting kicked out of bars for putting nonceramic balls on a pool table; or instead of song requests, passing death threats to Johnny, the 80-year-old piano player at Lafitte's. Oh, and in years past, two of Rick's friends have been mugged, one with a brick to the head. But like I said—mostly harmless!

The New Orleans St. Patty's Day parade has a similar vibe to the one in Southie, with the exception that in New Orleans the people on the floats throw cabbages at you. Perhaps predictably, this leads to cabbage dodgeball, which seems like a good idea at the time, and actually might've been if U.S. Airways hadn't lost Rick's luggage three days ago. Now, in addition to layers of grime on his khakis, he's got cabbage stains.

Fortunately, later that night Rick does some shopping in the French Quarter. Unfortunately, he doesn't shop for clothes. Clean pants are a dime a dozen, but how often do you get a chance to buy a trio of shellacked alligator heads? On the way out of the store, he wonders aloud what airport security is going to think about a guy with no luggage except for a bag of alligator heads. I'm guessing that in New Orleans that might be more common than you think.



We make it to Sunday with nobody getting arrested, although there's a dicey moment when one of our crew is thrown into a chokehold by a cop. Take-home lesson: It's never a good idea to slap a police horse on the ass. Also, note to self: Next time, don't go through airport security anywhere near Rodney Dangerfield S. Thompson, who has a tendency to start ranting to the TSA officers that the second amendment says he should be able to carry a gun on the plane. You know, like the founding fathers intended.

CLEAN PANTS ARE A DIME A DOZEN, BUT HOW OFTEN DO YOU GET A CHANCE TO BUY ALLIGATOR HEADS?

Some people might ask why I'm traveling halfway across the country for St. Patty's Day when one of the premier parties is going on right in my backyard. Well, I realize the answer on Monday morning: I feel disgusting, but my apartment looks fresh and welcoming, as opposed to the usual St. Patty's aftermath of sticky floors, stale beer and destruction. And that, friends, is why Boston guys fly to New Orleans for St. Patty's Day. Because when it comes to throw-down, throw-up fiestas, the best place to party is always someplace else. IB

THAT'S RICH

Bumpy Road Ahead

How great of an off-season has this really been for your New England Patriots?

Right now seems like a weird time to be talking about the Patriots. Opening day at Fenway is right around the corner, the Celtics are on the verge of landing one of two once-in-a-lifetime players at this year's draft and the Bruins are… aw, who am I kidding? My point is that even though they're currently the only inactive member of Boston's professional sports family, the Patriots' situation is one that still deserves a spot in the local headlines, right alongside Manny's grill and Brady's love for unprotected sex.

What I'm about to say isn't on par with all the glowing coverage the team's received lately. In fact, it's an argument so filled with pessimism I'm surprised Ron Borges hasn't already written about it. (Unless, of course, he was just waiting for someone else to write it first so he could steal their facts. In that case, Ron, feel free to go to town on this one.)

So here it is: I'm terrified about the 2007 season.

Last year, the Patriots went a remarkable 12-4. But in hindsight that record seems borderline unremarkable, once you consider they beat only two teams all year that finished the season with a winning record. They played only one road game against a winning team: week 2 against the Jets (who at the time weren't even a shadow of what they've become) and finished an ugly 1-3 at home against winning squads. Let's face it: That miraculous win against the Chargers saved the Patriots from a hell of a lot of off-season scrutiny. That one win erased the memory of what was, in all honesty, a pretty average 17 weeks of football. I mean, even when they were winning, did you ever feel that great about the 2006 Patriots?

But that was last season, and this year's Pats will obviously look a lot better. The addition of Adalius Thomas is a godsend for the defense. Tom Brady might throw 40 touchdowns now that his receivers actually have a pulse. And is there any other organization in football you trust to make better use of two first-round picks than Belichick/Pioli Inc.? I'm sure they'll take two winners. But I'm also sure of something else: The NFL schedule makers have gone out of their way to ensure that the 2007 regular season will be the most difficult one the Patriots have ever endured.

The Pats have five road games outside of their division in 2007—in Indianapolis, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Dallas and New York. (Not sure if there's any truth to the rumor they'll also be scrimmaging the '86 Bears.) Those teams finished last year a combined 50-30, and the Giants and Bengals both are likely to be a hell of a lot better than last year's 8-8 squads. At home, they'll have two virtual bye weeks against the Redskins and Browns, but they also host the Chargers, Eagles and Steelers. And when you consider that the Jets are now legit, and the Dolphins and Bills should at least be a little better, the thought of next year's gauntlet is scarier than a photo of Cameron Diaz without makeup.

So do I think the 2007 Patriots will be a better team than the 2006 version? Well, yeah—but right now, I'm not sure if these improvements compensate for the fact that the 2007 competition is infinitely tougher.

The movement this off-season is undoubtedly impressive, but part of me wonders if that's because we've been conditioned to embrace the organization's overly conservative behavior. In reality, haven't they only added one blue-chip linebacker and three average-to-good receivers? And am I the only one just mildly concerned that their once monstrous two-headed rushing attack is down to one guy who's also coming off major shoulder surgery? Do we really think Laurence Maroney is ready to shoulder (pun intended) the responsibility of a featured back?

EVEN WHEN THEY WERE WINNING, DID YOU EVER FEEL THAT GREAT ABOUT THE 2006 PATRIOTS?

New England cruised through most of last season, and by the time they reached the playoffs the Pats were maybe as well-rested and ready as they'd been all year. While I hope the team makes another trip to the post-season this winter, I have to wonder: After a regular season from hell, what condition will they be in to fight for their playoff lives—if they get that chance at all? THE DANCE

BY JOHN D. SPOONER

Two's a Crowd

Sharing space with strangers is more often a miss than hit.

There was a debate in my office recently between older and younger colleagues, male and female, about the merits of roommates.

College cured me of ever wanting roommates again. Not that they were bad people, mostly far from it. But having to share space with parents, siblings and various people, well, after a while I got sick of the intrusions. "Even if I have to live in a hole," I remember saying to myself, "I'm going to do it alone."

Military service was my ultimate roommate experience—dozens of recruits, the lowest of the low, in common barracks, with latrines containing four or five toilets, everyone sitting naked with no partitions. "What's the matter, girls?" one sergeant used to say. "Your mommy says you need privacy? There is no privacy in war."

Freshman year in college, I had seven roommates from various parts of America. Dean, from Watsonville, Calif., spent much of the day in our rooms, dressed in a large, yellow terry-cloth robe, studying German flash cards. He was a crew jock with sudden nutty quirks, like sitting in a basin of warm water to ease his hemorrhoids and "soothe his mind." I'm not sure that Dean had ever had a date in his life, but I know he lusted after my high school girlfriend, who occasionally used to visit our room. Dean had many comments about her behind my back, usually concerning her collection of angora sweaters. One day, he heard female voices in the stairwell. He hid in the bathroom wearing his yellow robe and, assuming it was my girlfriend, leapt into the living room, throwing open his robe and yelling, "Stick 'em up!" He found several other roommates and one of their mothers, visiting from Pittsburgh. Dean's now a doctor. And that fact always reminds me of the brilliant last shots of Animal House—when type rolls over the fraternity pictures with what had become of the guys after they graduated.

Later in college, I was lucky to have a roommate who was as charismatic a man as I've ever met in my life. Jacques was a Haitian aristocrat and handsome the way few men are, a magnet both for men who admired him and for women who wished he could be theirs. He danced into rooms with a merengue beat, "chicka-boom, chicka-boom." If you said, "I like those slippers on you," he'd take them off his feet, insist you put them on, and if you didn't accept them as a gift, he'd challenge you to a duel. The day we met he told me, "By 24, I'm going to be either dictator of Haiti or dead. Papa Doc Duvalier [then the dictator] is an evil man, ruining my country. When I overthrow him, my people will rejoice." He looked at me for any disbelief. "Believe what I say."

Jacques remained charming and focused, a pre-med student always juggling a soccer ball on the way to class and dating glamorous women as his second major. After graduation we lost track of each other, except for a cryptic postcard he sent from Paris that told me he had married and was in med school there. "Don't forget what I told you," he wrote. Sometime later, I got a call from a cousin of his who told me that Jacques had been killed in Port au Prince. He had led a raiding party against Papa Doc, believing the people would rise up against the dictator. It didn't happen, and Jacques was hunted down. He was 24 years old. I kept his slippers until they fell apart.

I believe the real education in college takes place from 12–3 am, shooting the breeze with roommates and friends. Aside from the cosmic debates over free will versus determinism, sex is right up there as a topic. Although half of my freshman roommates probably never had a date, everyone had high hopes in that department. And we did have a role model—one of the guys, from Oxford, Miss., had dated Mary Ann Mobley, who later became a Miss America when that was a really big deal. Virginity was a focus of these conversations, with a minority of the group insisting they'd be pure on their wedding night. And none of them were fundamentalists. Greg, the best debater in the college, was insistent on his purity, telling me that my dreams of conquest were "immoral and beneath me." One day, when all the roommates knew I was bringing my girlfriend up for a visit, Greg tacked a sign on my door that imitated a needlepoint sampler. My girlfriend read it before entering.

"What does this mean?" she asked, pointing to the sign. It read, "Virtue is its own reward."

"Is that some kind of insult?" she added.

Where were "friends with benefits" then, when we really needed them? IB

SOLEDAD O'BRIEN

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

CNN anchor Soledad O'Brien was born and raised on Long Island, the daughter of an Afro-Cuban mother and an Australian father who met at Johns Hopkins University and had to travel north to marry because of miscegenation laws in the South. Like her five siblings, Soledad graduated from Harvard. She began her career at WBZ-TV 4 before serving as a local reporter and bureau chief for KRON, the NBC affiliate in San Francisco. She joined NBC in 1991 and became anchor of MSNBC's award-winning technology program The Site and its weekend morning news show; in 1999, she was named the anchor for NBC's Weekend Today. O'Brien left NBC in 2003 to anchor CNN's flagship early program, American Morning, which she cohosts with Miles O'Brien (no relation). During her time at the network, she has been part of the team that earned a George Foster Peabody Award for its coverage of Hurricane Katrina and an Alfred I. DuPont Award for its coverage of the 2004 tsunami in southeast Asia. In 2007, the NAACP bestowed its President's Award on her, one year after she received the National Urban League's Women of Power Award. She has won a regional Emmy, has been named one of People magazine's "50 Most Beautiful" and is a member of both the National Association of Black Journalists and the National Association of Hispanic Journalists. On April 26, the American Red Cross of Massachusetts Bay will honor her with its 2007 Clara Barton Award. She lives in New York with her husband and four young children.

Jonathan Soroff: First of all, your name means solitude. Do you like being alone?

Soledad O'Brien: No, I don't. Never have, although I guess loneliness is when you have no friends and solitude is when you choose to be alone.

JS: Not really an option when you have four kids.

SO: Exactly. I should be a little desperate to be alone.

JS: Worst story you ever covered?

SO: The worst as in miserable conditions was covering Jesse Ventura when he became governor of Minnesota. He didn't want any media inside at his inauguration, so we were outside for eight hours. I believe it was 8 degrees. Worst in terms of full-scale tragedy would, sadly, be a toss-up between Hurricane Katrina and the tsunami in southeast Asia. They were just enormous human tragedies on such a massive scale.

JS: How do you keep your emotions out of it?

SO: Well, the main thing is that I just don't think the story is about me, so I'm always a bit baffled about people asking how I respond to a story. I'm just there to tell it.

JS: It has to affect you, though.

SO: It certainly does. Like after the tsunami, I'd go to bed and every time I'd lie down, I'd cry, and I'd finally call one of my girlfriends to chat until I fell asleep. Same thing with Hurricane Katrina. Once you get home, you sort of fall apart.

JS: Biggest nonstory you ever covered?

SO: There was a rumor that a black mamba had escaped in San Francisco, and I was sent out to cover it. The competition for that may be a guy who, after the Oakland Hills fire, had his cat return after it was missing for two years, and he believed that it was the reincarnation of his roommate who had died in the fire. I did the live shot with the cat.

"AFTER THE TSUNAMI, I'D GO TO BED AND EVERY TIME I'D LIE DOWN, I'D CRY AND CALL ONE OF MY FRIENDS TO CHAT UNTIL I FELL ASLEEP."

JS: Biggest on-air gaffe?

SO: My first live shot ever. The San Francisco Giants had just made it into the playoffs and I was at a sports bar to cover the fans' reaction. Just as I was about to start my piece, I realized how drunk everybody was, and this guy came up behind me and grabbed my rear-end, and I just sort of stuttered until they cut away.

JS: One thing you'd change about your appearance if you could?

SO: I wish I had hair that didn't take an hour to do, but I like my hair and I like my hairdo.

JS: You're workin' that That Girl flip pretty hard.

SO: Yeah, but it's cute, right?

JS: Definitely. So keep it.

SO: OK, then the one thing I'd change? I'd like not to have to wear makeup on TV. There is really nothing that makes you feel more ridiculous than running out to cover a story and worrying about applying mascara.

JS: What's your dream assignment?

SO: I'd like to really get into Africa and tell that story in a really compelling way, and show the disaster that is Darfur.

JS: One story from history you would most like to have covered?

SO: I think it's because I'm knee-deep in Cuba right now, but I would have loved to cover the arrival of Fidel Castro to power. The first wave when there was a lot of hope about the direction his regime would take.

JS: Is Anderson Cooper the best-looking man on TV and shouldn't he be my boyfriend?

SO: He is so handsome, with those beautiful blue eyes, and then on top of it, he's so nice and so funny. The guy is so self-deprecating.

JS: Katie Couric: the real deal, or a Keebler elf stationed at an anchor desk?

SO: [Laughs.] She's a mentor of mine.

JS: OK, Nancy Grace and Ann Coulter: Don't you think it would be fun to put them on a deserted island to watch them cannibalize each other?

SO: One of them would definitely kill the other. I'm not sure who would win, actually. I guess Nancy Grace.

JS: Person you'd most like to get stuck on an elevator with: Diane Sawyer, Barbara Walters, Lesley Stahl or Christiane Amanpour?

SO: Gosh, any of them. I had lunch with Christiane Amanpour the other day. She's so smart, and funny as hell, too. Diane Sawyer would be great. They'd all have great stories to tell.

JS: Thing you miss the most about Harvard Square?

SO: An avocado wrap with tahini sauce that was unbelievable. That or Steve's Ice Cream. They knew me there. I'd walk in and they'd say, "The regular?" Hence the freshman 15.

JS: Do you watch TV news at home?

SO: I do. I watch everything. I click through everything. I watch 60 Minutes every Sunday night. I watch a lot of CNN's line-up. Even when our show is going, I'm taping the competition.

JS: Any guilty pleasures: the Drudge Report, People magazine, Entertainment Tonight*...?*

SO: I never knew People was a guilty pleasure. Those are work, man!

JS: So how often do people assume that you and Miles are married?

SO: Ninety-nine percent of the time.

JS: Stephen Colbert called you his favorite "omniracial newswoman."

SO: I had to explain to my mother that that whole thing was satire.

JS: What time do you get up in the morning?

SO: Quarter of three.

JS: How does your husband deal with that?

SO: What kind of question is that? How do I deal with it! He sleeps like a log.

JS: So what time do you go to bed?

SO: Between 8:30 and 9:30. I'm constantly sleep-deprived.

JS: Do your kids watch you on TV?

SO: They do, and it's really funny because my daughters who are 3 and 4 will say something that was clearly our top story of the day, like, "I hope you don't have to take JetBlue. I hear they've had all kinds of problems lately."

JS: Your birthday is Sept. 19. What traits of a Virgo do you have?

SO: Very intense, a perfectionist, organized, intelligent and critical, meticulous and reliable, practical and diligent, a worrier. I am a total and complete Virgo, and I love being one. I also like working with them. You know why? We get stuff done.

JS: My very last question: When your parents got married, interracial marriage was illegal in the South and now people think, "How primitive." Do you think that's how we'll look back at gay marriage?

SO: Absolutely. Over time, issues that are at the forefront of the national debate become less threatening, and the passing of time takes the sting out. I think people will stop debating about it within the next generation. IB

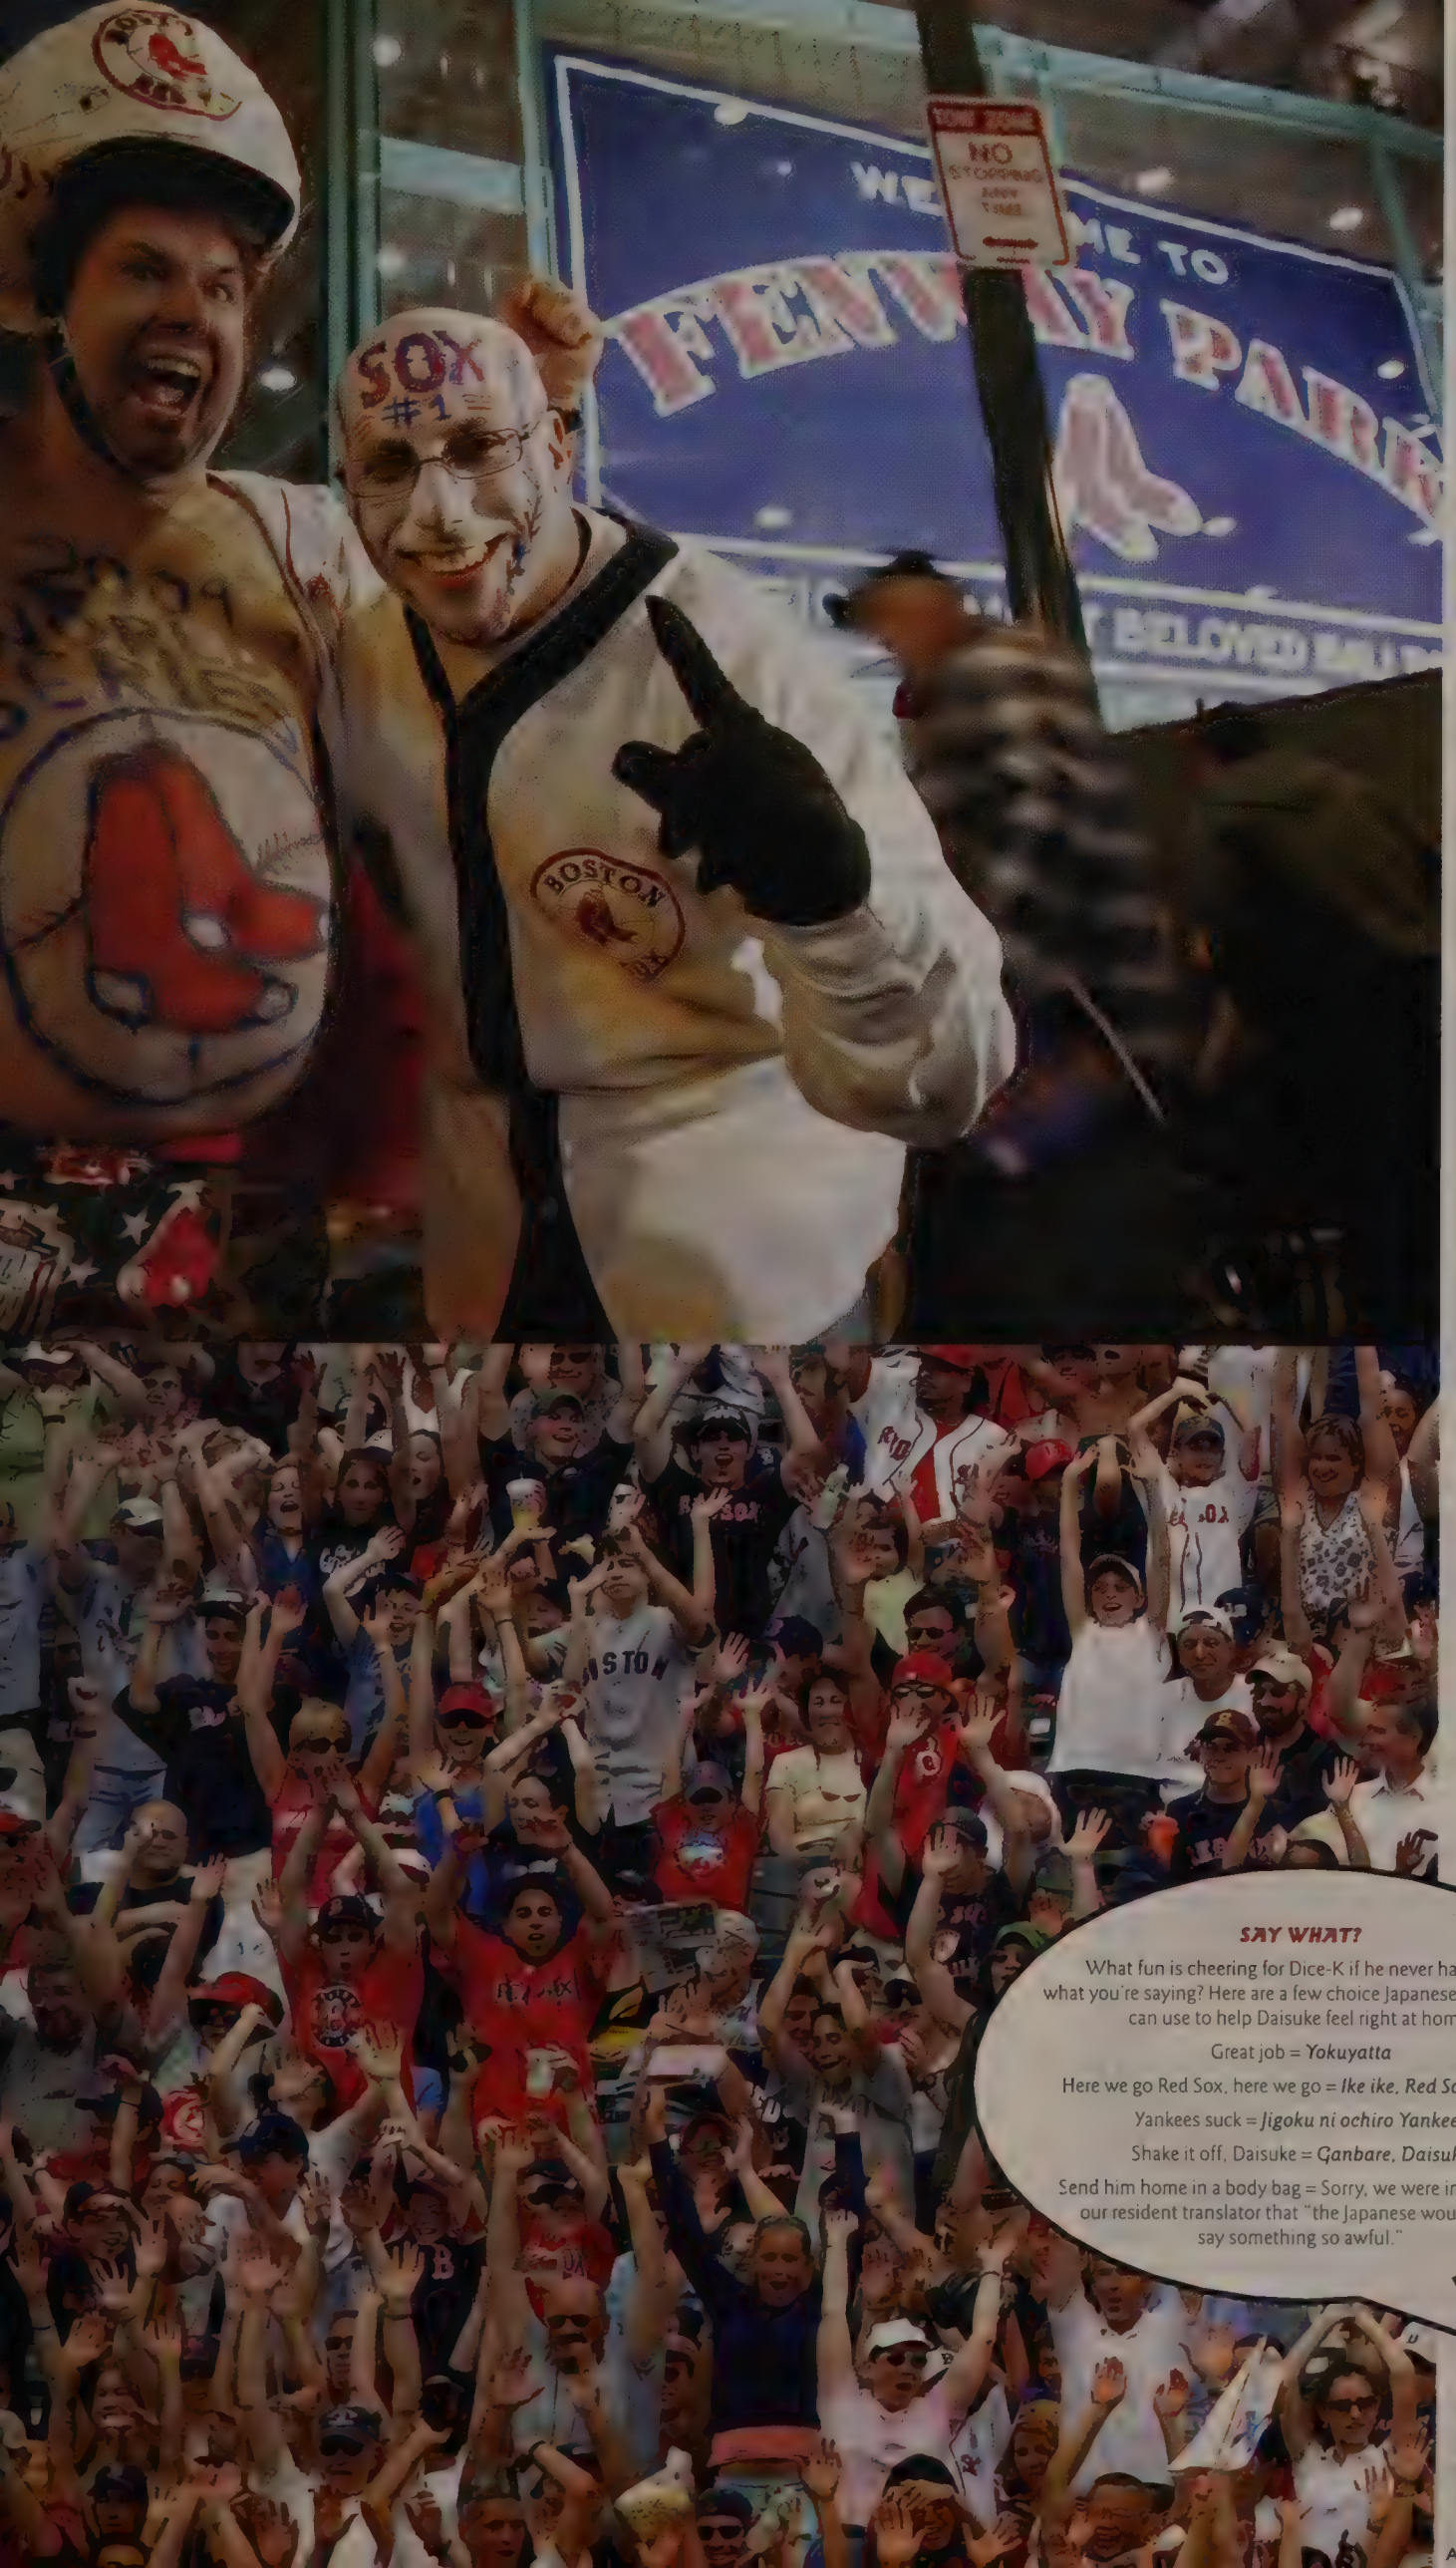
RED SOX NATION 2007

MANNY RAMIREZ: CINDYLOO/BOSTON RED SOX

By Rich Levine and Ezra Dyer



THIS TIME OF YEAR, DIEHARD AND CASUAL RED SOX FANS alike tend to repeat a familiar routine to prepare for the upcoming 162 games. Step 1: Get all excited and read everything you can about the team, eventually talking yourself into the conclusion that, although we've got some holes, this is gonna be 2004 all over again. Step 2: Pick up a two-inch by three-inch fridge-magnet season schedule that bears the logo of your local pizza place/tire emporium/bail bondsman. Step 3: Slap that sucker on the fridge and wait for opening day.

With this issue, we'd like to change that routine and offer a package that'll both fire you up and serve as a useful resource in the months to come. For starters, we've got an interview with bullpen anchorman Jonathan Papelbon, who talks about the whole starter-closer controversy and why he ended up back in the 'pen.

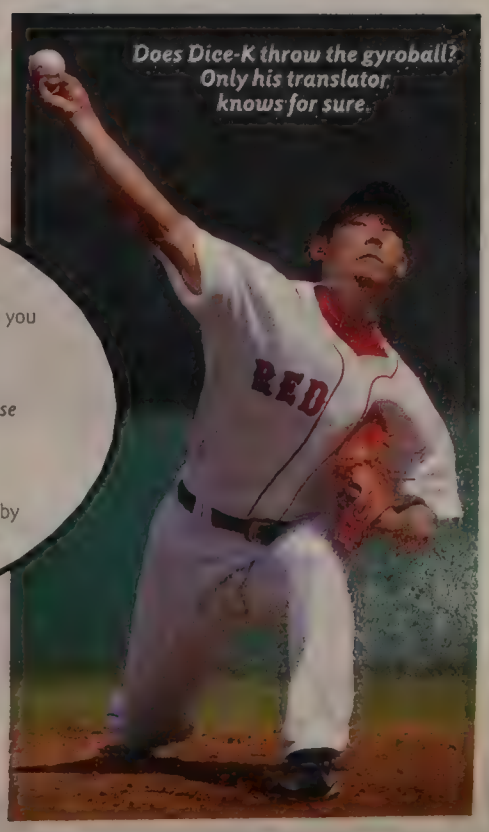
We've got tips for attending a game, including a few nuggets that you'll find useful even if you're a Fenway vet—from avoiding the alcohol-free sections to sneaking onto Yawkey Way. And since Fenway looks different every year, we also let you know what's new for 2007 at the lyric little bandbox.

As usual, there are some fresh faces on the roster this year, and in honor of the Red Sox' new man from Japan, we give you a list of handy English-to-Japanese translations, as well as a guide to the mysterious gyroball. And, as a service to the players, we've put together a list of suggested coming-to-the-plate theme songs for the starting nine (and a new "out of the bullpen" tune for Paps).

Finally, we're including a tear-out season schedule. It's yours to keep, a gift from us to you. Unlike your typical fridge-magnet version, ours delves deeper than merely identifying home and away matchups—for instance, which games feature a visiting player who's under investigation for steroid use? These are the kind of highlights you need on your calendar.

GYROMANIA!

Amidst all the hype surrounding Dice-K's U.S. arrival is the growing legend of the gyroball (pronounced "hero-ball" in Greece, we assume). After some shoddy research, we still don't know if Dice-K really has the so-called Mystery Demon Pitch in his arsenal, but we did come across this collection of gyroball fun facts:



1. Red Sox day games typically start no earlier than 1:05 pm because Massachusetts blue laws prohibit the throwing of gyroballs before noon.

2. Video game designers at EA Sports estimate that they'll finally have enough processing power to represent the gyroball upon the release of the PlayStation 4,000.

3. Three live gyroballs were found on Anna Nicole's person moments after her fatal overdose.

4. A radar gun can't measure the gyroball. Scientists can infer its properties from its effect on batters. Dice-K once threw a gyroball into Switzerland's Large Hadron Collider, where it disappeared into another dimension.

5. If you place a phonograph needle on the surface of a moving gyroball, it plays "Walking on Broken Glass" by Annie Lennox.

SAY WHAT?

What fun is cheering for Dice-K if he never has a clue what you're saying? Here are a few choice Japanese phrases you can use to help Daisuke feel right at home.

Great job = Yokuyatta

Yankees suck = Jigoku ni ochiro Yankees

Shake it off, Daisuke = Ganbare, Daisuke

SECOND-YEAR PITCHING PHENOM JONATHAN PAPELBON BRINGS THE HEAT IN THE NINTH. BUT HOW WILL HE HANDLE SOME IMPROPER CURVEBALLS?

A couple of weeks ago, we spoke to Jonathan Papelbon about his move to the starting rotation. He said he didn't even want to think about closing this season—that the Red Sox had drafted him as a starter and that's what he'd always wanted to do. Six days later, the Red Sox called a press conference announcing that Papelbon would be returning to the bullpen. Obviously, we had to get the 26-year-old All-Star back on the phone. What follows is a combination of the two conversations with the Sox' former ex-closer over the course of a week in late March.

Improper Bostonian: So things have certainly changed a bit since we last spoke. Do you feel like you have to get yourself in a different mindset now after an entire off-season spent preparing to start? Jonathan Papelbon: Definitely. My entire route of thinking has to change. But thanks to the fact that I broke into the big leagues as a closer, I already have confidence in that role.

You've said that Tito's going to have a couple of rules this year as far as how often you pitch. Is that going to give you the confidence to just throw like hell when you're out there and not worry about any of last year's arm problems? Yeah, definitely. There's going to be a routine for me, just like there is for the starters, and I'll always have my arm checked out, but honestly, the arm feels fine. My arm's one of the strongest we have in camp, so I'm not thinking about anything negative.

How big of a lift do you think this is going to give the team, knowing now that if they can just get to the ninth, you'll be waiting in the wings? I think it definitely gives the team another little notch on their belt, knowing I'm back there.

So now that there's an opening in the rotation, what would you say if Theo went out and offered Roger Clemens a contract? Well, that'd obviously be cool, but that's not something we can think about. We know what we're capable of, and we have faith in each other either way.

Can you try to explain what it is about Jason Varitek that makes him so valuable when you're on the mound? It's never just one thing with Tek. It's everything: the way he manages the staff, the way he approaches every plate appearance, the way he takes on [the] role of captain.

So how's your Japanese coming along? I don't know one word and I'm not sure I ever will. I'm not sure it's a good idea to start learning another language when I barely know English.

But seriously, how's it been this spring with Matsuzaka Mania? Does it ever get to be too much for you guys? Well, there's definitely more media around than there has been in the past, but we're all pros and pretty much know how to handle it. And Dice-K understands what it's gong to be like. With him being in the right mindset, it'll be easier to deal with.

Do you and your wife live up here full-time now, or do you still spend the off-season down south? We live in Jacksonville, Fla., in the off-season, so it's really the best of both worlds. Once it starts to get cold up here, we're out.

What do you do with yourself when you're not pitching? In the off-season I love getting out and hunting duck. That's the time when I can get away from baseball and just sit and think about absolutely nothing. We also like to get out on the town when we can.

How about when you're in Boston? It must be tough to go out socially. Yeah, every year that I'm here it gets harder and harder. I understand where people are coming from, and you try to give back as much as you can, but it gets tough. It unfortunately reaches a point where you can't even go out and enjoy some company. But like I said, I completely understand where fans are coming from.

And you have a dog that keeps you pretty busy too, right? Yeah, we got Boss. He's a 16-month-old French bulldog. He's always with me—even travels on the road if we're at a pet-friendly hotel.

You should get him some Sox gear to wear. [My wife] already has a bunch of crazy shirts she makes him wear. One says, "Bitches Love Me," and another one says, "El Jefe," which is "boss" in Spanish.

All right, just a few more questions: Favorite sports movie? Major League.

You were channeling Wild Thing with your mohawk last season. We don't have to worry about you going all sissy and corporate on us in your second year like Rick Vaughn, do we? [Laughs.] No way. That haircut was only about losing a bet. I would've never done that myself.

Favorite band? That's definitely Metallica.

Favorite actress? Pamela Anderson's someone who I've obviously been really into since I was younger.

Wow, I'm guessing some of our readers might take issue with you calling her an actress... Then let's put actress slash... whatever else it is she does.

OK, last question: Now that you're back to closing, will it still be "Bodies" when you come out of the dugout, or do you have something new for us? I'm actually not sure about that yet.

So it's something new? Come on, give us a hint. Sorry, you're just going to have to wait and see.

FENWAY ADDITIONS

Much like George Steinbrenner or FOX's The War at Home, Fenway Park just won't die. We're actually starting to think she might outlive us all. But let's give ownership some credit. With every passing year, whether it's the Monster Seats, Budweiser Pavilion or a new grill for Manny, there's always something to anticipate. Here are a few of the improvements you'll see around Fenway this spring.

Cup holders in the field box seats: A welcome addition for fans who've ever reached down for their beer, only to realize that not one of their discarded peanut shells made it all the way to the ground.

Third-base deck behind the grandstands: Not only does this new area create more space for extra standing-room-only "seats," but it also houses a new batch of concessions that should help cut down on long lines elsewhere. We can taste the stale beer now.

Stairway from Yawkey Way directly up to the grandstand behind home plate: This summer, when the game-day cattle call from Yawkey Way to Fenway is a little less sweaty and congested, you'll have this addition to thank. The new staircase allows those with seats in section 22 (and environs) to skip the labyrinth that is the dark undercarriage of Fenway and walk from the street right up to their seats. Easier for them, more room for everyone else.

Visible visitors' batting cage: Now you can call A-Rod a p---- while he's playing AND practicing. The visitors' batting cage has been moved from its home in the center field bleachers (more on that in a second) and to a new indoors setup that before long will be visible from inside Game On!

Bleacher bar and grill: Potentially the coolest addition to the Fenway scene. By midseason, the Sox should be ready to draw the curtain on a new restaurant that sits under the center field bleachers (where the visitors' batting cage used to be). The to-be-named grill will open onto Lansdowne and will also feature a view into the park. No word yet on whether Manny will be allowed to have cheese fries delivered to him in left field.

LEGEND

Hide the women and children: This opposing team has at least one (and possibly several) rumored 'roid ragers in the lineup.

Everyone needs a night off from the Sox once in a while. If you want a break, this is the series to take it.

Any Red Sox game gives you an excuse to party, but this series will be especially festive. Drink up!

Players come and go, but when a former local favorite takes the field against the Sox, put those pretty little memories on hold. He's the enemy now.

Pay close attention. This series has serious postseason implications.

We know how crazy the media will be with Dice-K around, but when major Japanese talents converge (we're looking at you, Ichiro), it could get scary.

Know Thy Fenway

Not that you aren't already an expert on the ins and outs of getting to the game. But with another season underway, we figured that a little refresher course—much like Kid 'n Play—"Ain't Gonna Hurt Nobody."

▶ If you like beer, make sure your tickets aren't in sections 32 and 33. Those are the alcohol-free sections, and it can be a horrible surprise to sit down with your cold beverage and get hustled out by an usher.

▶ Seats marked "Obstructed view—people" are low and right next to a ramp or walkway. You might think there couldn't possibly be people walking in front of you and blocking your view for the entire game. You'd be wrong.

▶ The Who's on First gambit: When the Sox installed turnstiles on Yawkey Way, they gated off the front entrance to Who's on First. But you don't need a ticket to get in the back, through the alley off Brookline Street. Once you're in the building... well, you can put two and two together. The only thing between you and standing room at Fenway is a slyly passed Benjamin or sexual favors!

THREE POINTERS ON SCALPERS

1 Don't buy from the first guy you see at the top of the stairs at the Kenmore T stop. People who deal with the first scalper they see reek of desperation, and they pay accordingly. Get closer to the park, and you'll have more options—and, thanks to the higher supply, competitive prices.

2 If you've gotta go the scalper route, try not to have a wacky number of people in your crew, like three or five. Scalpers generally have an even number of tickets, and if they suspect that you're going to stick them with a harder-to-hawk single ticket, they'll jack up the price to compensate for your pain-in-the-assedness.

3 This almost goes without saying, but if you can keep your pants on and chill out in a bar until after the game starts, you'll be in a much better position to broker a deal. Your bargaining point: "If I don't buy your tickets, I'll go right back in that bar and keep watching the game on TV, which I was doing anyway. But if you don't sell your tickets, you're losing money." Yeah, take that, scalper!

Season Predictions

No one can be sure how 2007 is going to play out for the Sox (if so, we'd be writing this from a suite at the MGM Las Vegas), but that didn't stop us from taking a crack at where we think the team might stand heading into each month of the season.

APRIL Amazingly, all six Yankees games scheduled for April are postponed due to weather, and all six are rescheduled for an off-day, June 11. Grady Little calls Francona to offer advice on how to manage his pitchers in this unprecedented situation. "I think Schilling can go five," says Little. "Five innings?" asks Francona. "No," replies Little. "Five games."

MAY Declaring, "Seems like we've got all the starting pitching depth we'll ever need around here," Theo Epstein trades Tim Wakefield for a new infield tarp. Schilling and Matsuzaka immediately go on the DL.

JUNE As usual, the Sox feast on the National League, winning 11 out of 12 against the Rockies, Giants, Braves and Padres. Suspicions that the National League is hustling the AL arise when Padres manager Bud Black casually says to Francona, "If we meet again in October, what say we put some money on it?"

JULY Matsuzaka's translator spends the All-Star break figuring out how to explain the word "swoon" in Japanese.

AUGUST Manny spends 15 days on the DL after straining his hammy while riding his unicorn. Says Tito, "I didn't know Manny had a unicorn, but I support my players. And if you're insinuating that he's just taking a break because he feels like it, you're a big jerk."

SEPTEMBER The Red Sox finish second in the American League East but hold onto the Wild Card. Nobody is surprised. What's surprising is who finishes first, as one-man wrecking crew Rocco Baldelli and his spunky band of Devil Ray misfits won't be denied their first pennant.

OCTOBER Matsuzaka pans out as well as anyone could imagine, Beckett regains his postseason form, Schilling comes up big again, Papi and Manny do their thing, and a few unlikely heroes pop up to carry the team in clutch situations. ALCS at least.

STAIRWAY 2 HEAVEN

A 19TH-CENTURY CHURCH STEEPLE GETS A MODERN MAKEOVER

TEXT REGINA COLE PHOTOGRAPHS GREG PREMRU

STYLING HOLLY DONALDSON

When Mike Hodgson moved to Boston from New York in 2004, he knew he wanted a permanent home and he knew what kind of neighborhood he wanted.

"I feel as though I've spent my whole adult life moving around," says Hodgson, creative director for Cambridge BioMarketing who's originally from Chicago. "So I had time to think about what I was looking for. I wanted to be part of a street scene. A lot of Boston neighborhoods are beautiful, but everything shuts down long before midnight. That's what drew me to the North End. Italians stay up late! Here I could eat a lot of Italian food, and places stay open until 1 am."

His search led him to a condominium in a late-19th-century building on Hanover Street that had originally housed a Methodist Church. This part of the North End's main business thoroughfare was once called "Methodist Alley" because Methodist churches crowded the street the way Italian restaurants do today. Later, the church became a Jewish temple, then a retirement home for sailors; in the 1980s the interior was divided into condominiums. The three-story, red-brick building's façade still retains hallmarks of its ecclesiastical roots: Tall windows rise to pointed Gothic arches, and at one corner a steeple soars up into the sky. It was this corner unit, incorporating the steeple, that Hodgson saw and fell for.

"The minute I saw that steeple I said, 'I've got to have it,'" he says.

However, the 1980s condo conversion had not been kind to the historic building.

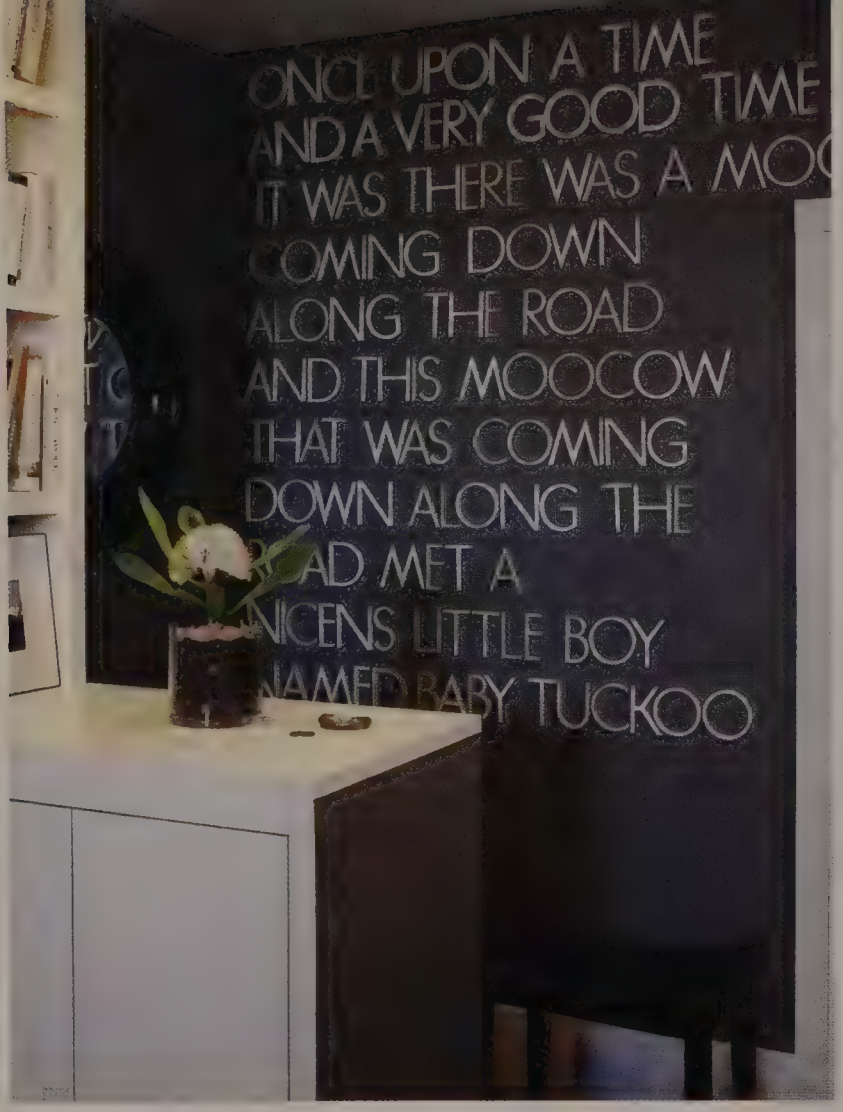
"The space was incredibly cool, but not very stylish," he recalls. An "ingrown toenail of a coat closet" (as his interior designer calls it) made the entry feel cramped. And then there was the bathroom.

"They had located it so that, to get to it from the second-story loft bedroom, you had to walk around the corner into the steeple and then up some stairs. Very inconvenient, and it made the steeple space unusable."

He found Kristine Irving when he walked into Koo de Kir, her home furnishings and accessories store in Beacon Hill. (The name is a phonetic rendition of "coup de coeur," a French phrase that loosely means "a strike to the heart.") Irving, whose interior design business is an outgrowth of the success of her Charles Street shop, has an aesthetic that mixes warm, personal objects with a clean, contemporary style.

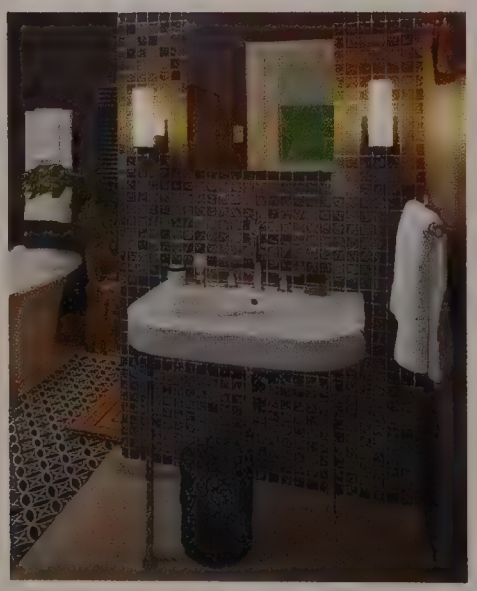
"I liked her store and knew she did interior design," Hodgson says. "We got along, which was important—I knew it would be a lengthy process."

He never considered going it alone. "I work in advertising, where we work in teams. I'm a good writer, and I know what I'm good at, but I'm not that comfortable visualizing three-dimensional space or working with contractors and tradespeople. I knew that if I did it myself, it would take forever and cost much more. The main decision I made, after I decided to buy this place, was choosing Kristine to design it for me."



He gave Irving a short list of specifications: He wanted the bathroom to be on the same level as the bedroom. He wanted to use the steeple. He wanted room for his books and his found objects.

"I wanted the design to respect the space, and for it to look like a place where a single guy would be comfortable. In other words, not too precious."



Irving succeeded on all fronts, creating a home that mixes the collection of abandoned school desks salvaged by her client with elegant Italian furniture, and introducing hefty millwork and architectural elements to suit the building's history and style. She squared off the many funky angles created in the 1980s renovation and built a splendid new bath worthy of any sybarite. She removed the "ingrown" coat closet in favor of a small area that functions as a mudroom while maintaining the sense of openness and space that's vital to a well-designed 1,200-square-foot unit.

"Our biggest problem was finding a contractor, since most builders don't want to work where there's no parking and no elevators. One of my top clients referred me to Pomeroy and

EARTHY MEETS ELEGANT IN THE STAIRWELL, WHERE A CHANDELIER MADE OF OLD WINE-BARREL STAVES AND GOTHIC ARCHES IN THE BALUSTRADE EVOKE THE SPACE'S RICH HISTORY.

Co. of Charlestown, and they've been terrific," she says.

Her design incorporates door casings and baseboards twice the size of the flimsy millwork installed 20 years ago. Irving squared off the stair treads and widened the staircase that leads to the loft. The balustrade is now composed of white-painted Gothic arches, replicating a small section of the original. The focal point upon entering the space, the staircase echoes the Gothic arches of the exterior windows and pays homage to the building's liturgical past. Into the stairwell descends a curvaceous chandelier constructed from old wine-barrel staves.

"We sell them in our shop," Irving smiles. "I wanted the structure to be very refined and for the furnishings to bring in history and age. This chandelier, which is made by a guy in the Carolinas, set the overall design concept."

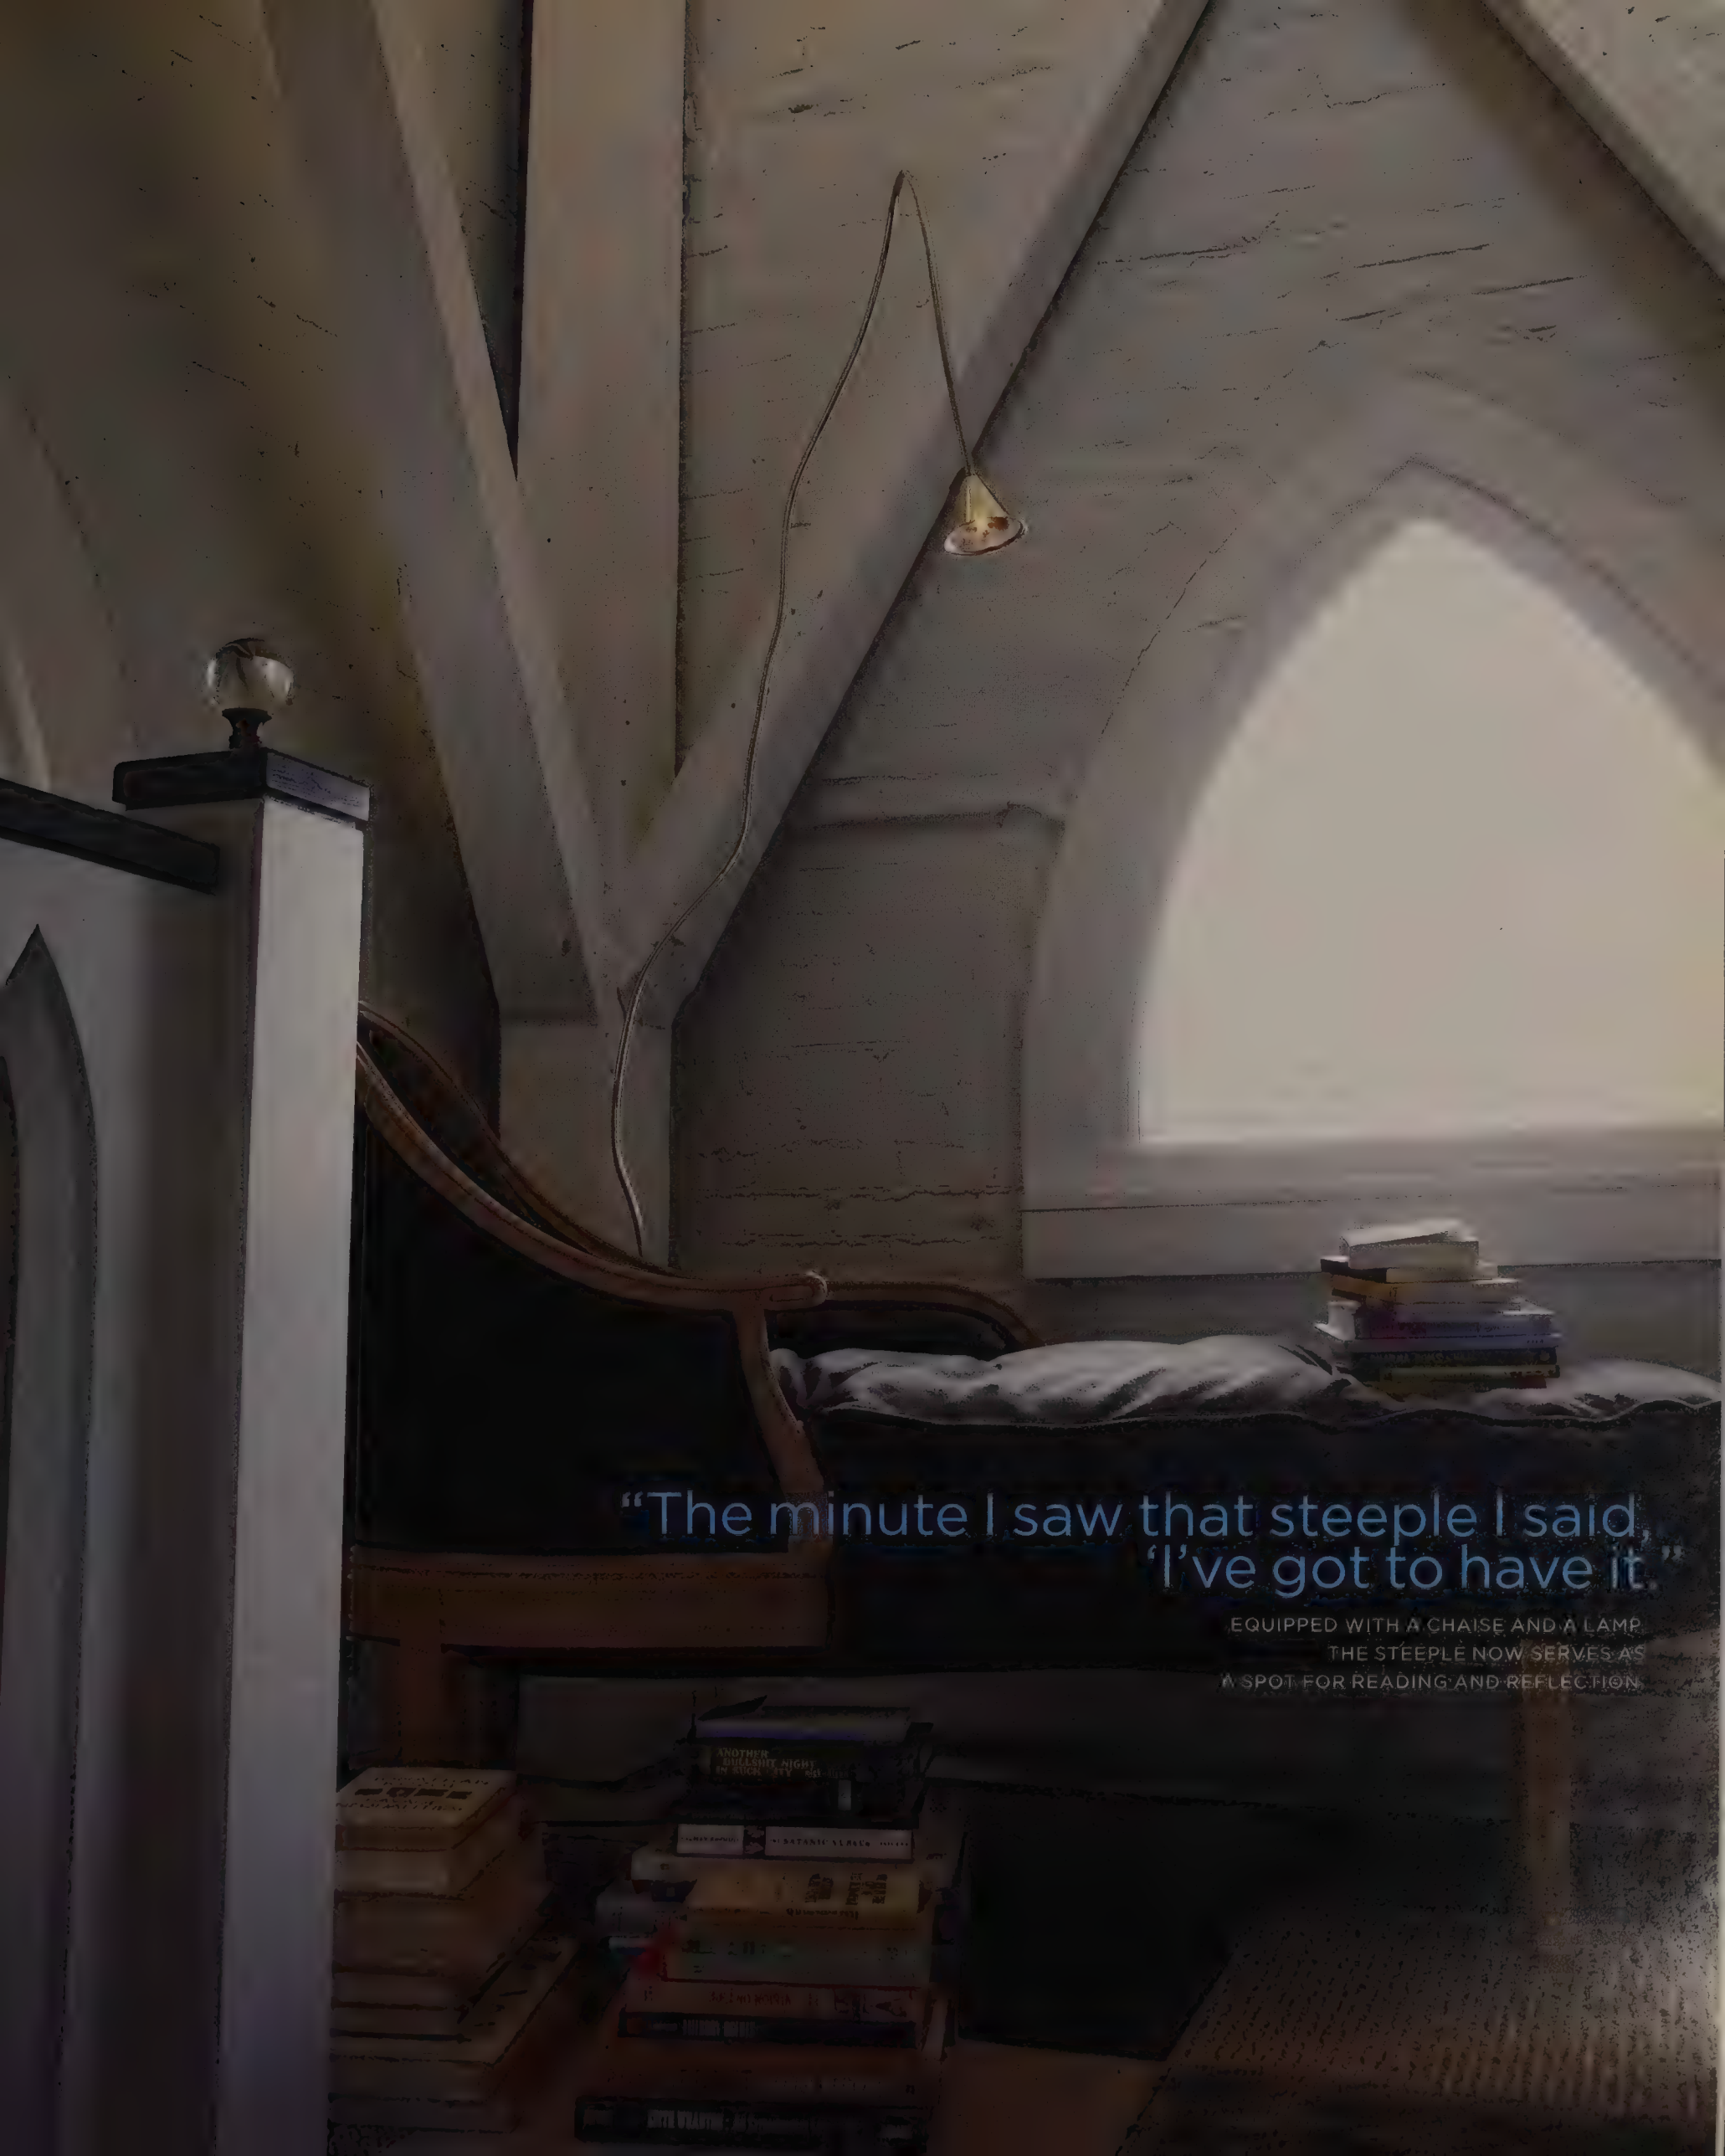
At the top of the now-beautiful stairs, its newel posts crowned by clear glass spheres, Hodgson's bedroom is a spare, simple space. A metal and reverse-painted glass armoire is half entertainment center, half clothes closet. Two of his old school desks serve as bedside tables. And the bathroom, now easily accessible, provides luxury with a sunflower showerhead in a glass enclosure large enough for several people, a vast soaking tub and radiant heat under the limestone floor. A pocket door between the bedroom and bath saves space; Hodgson usually leaves it open.

"The sink wall that faces the door is lined with mosaic tiles in beautiful shades of brown," Irving says. "It's like sculpture."

And the short sections of railroad ties standing by the tub? "That's the place to put a glass of wine or a book while soaking in the tub," she says. "And they're another example of how we mixed refined, sophisticated elements with more earthy and rough-hewn things."

The steeple room next to the bathroom, now happily separate, has become Hodgson's retreat, furnished with one upholstered chaise and a small table.

"It's where I go to read, to ponder things, to stew," he says.



The colors Irving chose for the interior walls are earth tones, ranging from soft beige to taupe to brown, and greys.

"I wanted to create a soothing background and for the furnishings to stand out," she says. "I convinced Mike to go with a darker floor; I believe that grounds the design. The wall colors create a flattering palette without calling too much attention to themselves."

"What I like best about the colors is the way the most private areas are the darkest," Hodgson says. "They give a sense of going deeper into the space."

Irving and Hodgson both point to a creation just inside the entry as representative of the space, of his personality and of their work together. Antique Danish clay letters spell out the first sentence of James Joyce's A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man.

"The book starts with the protagonist as a child; by the time it ends, he's a fully formed artist," explains Hodgson. "For me, it's a great metaphor for the day. When I walk out the door in the morning, I want to believe that the day is fresh and young and that anything is possible." iB

TALK ABOUT OLD-SCHOOL. The ENIAC, or Electronic Numerical Integrator and Computer, was one of the earliest programmable processors. Designed by the U.S. Army in the 1940s for ballistics research, ENIAC measured 100 feet long, eight feet high and weighed 30 tons. Pictures of it show a gymnasium-sized, battleship-colored behemoth, barfing up wires and manned by young scientists straight from a Howard Hawks film.

We've come a long way, baby. Or have we? Sure, computers today are smaller, faster and more powerful than the ENIAC, but do they look any prettier? Apple may have reintroduced the idea of smart design to personal electronics with its iPods and iMacs, but browse through the catalogues of most PC vendors or peek under the desks in most offices, and you'll be left wanting. And computers aren't alone. Lackluster looks are the rule rather than the exception when it comes to personal electronics, which we generally buy to do a job, not to match the upholstery. But more than ever, discerning gadget freaks and inspired decorators can find devices that flaunt both form and function. We've picked a few products that straddle the line between geek and chic.

1 Holmris Hansen Milk Desk: Take a Stand

History will show that former defense secretary Donald Rumsfeld was wrong about many things. But one thing he got dead right was the standing desk. Rumsfeld, you see, was a big fan of the standing desk, and on this one, I'm with Rummy. I'm a tall guy whose back and shoulders throb after a day hunched over my keyboard. That's why I flipped out when I stumbled upon the combo sitting-standing Milk Desk from Scandinavian furniture maker Holmris Hansen.

Designed by Søren Kjær, Milk Desk is a roomy (area: 55⅛ inches by 25¼ inches) and stylish writing surface that can be used as either a traditional or an upright desk, thanks to an electric frame and a height-adjustment button that boosts it from 29 to 48 inches. Finished in a white, high-gloss lacquer, it accommodates MP3 players, cords and assorted gadgets. The solid top has built-in space to run cables for monitors, keyboards and mice, while storage units can hold pencils, an iPod, a trash bin and even a clear, plastic fish tank. Now that's cool!

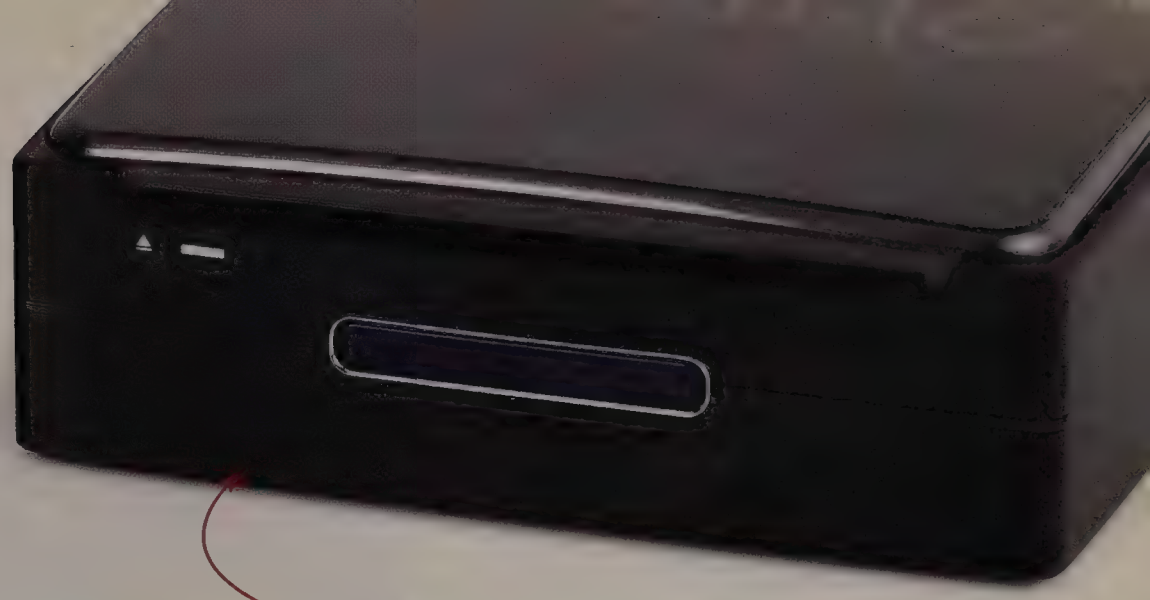
2 Bose Companion 5: Big Sound, Small Package

It wasn't all that long ago that your desktop computer was for, well, working. Sound quality wasn't really part of the package—nor was anyone asking for it. After all, did you really need to hear the Windows start-up or AOL's "You've got mail!" in surround sound?

That's all changed. Today's home computers are fast morphing into media centers that store everything from movies to music libraries. With that kind of content flowing, bargain-basement speakers just won't cut it.

In recent years, high-end PC amps have entered the market, offering serious wattage and booming subwoofers, some with a mix of large and small speakers that deliver surround-sound effects. Framingham-based Bose's Companion 5 works with both Macs and PCs, connecting with a USB cable. The system contains the newest generation of Bose's proprietary TrueSpace surround-processing circuitry, designed specifically for computer applications. But the best feature may be the "control pod," which allows you to adjust the speaker and headphone volume—or shut it off altogether with a one-touch mute button.
Available at Tweeter and Best Buy, $399; www.bose.com



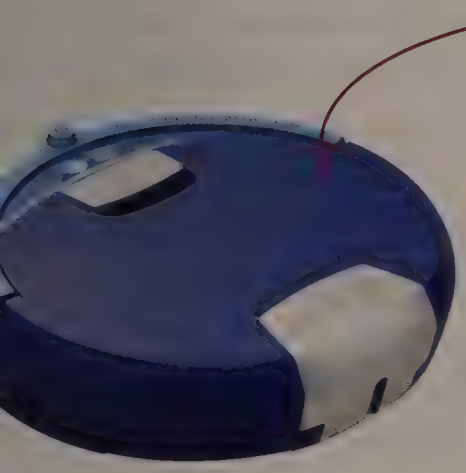
3 Samsung Wireless ICE: Intelligent Refrigeration

I remember the refrigerator in my first apartment after college: a squat General Electric that dated to the early '50s. It must've weighed 500 pounds. Comparing an appliance like that to today's machines is like comparing the knuckle-dragging primates in the film 2001 to their space-walking descendants.

Take the new Samsung Wireless ICE refrigerator. Sleek, smart and powerful, the 25-cubic-foot ICE is the latest in Samsung's family of home appliances. Unveiled at the Consumer Electronics Show in January, it isn't so much a food-storage appliance as a font of knowledge and nutrition. Equipped with a 10½-inch wireless TFT (Thin Film Transistor), touch-sensitive LCD pad that's both a TV and a graphic user interface (GUI), Wireless ICE comes with built-in features that allow households to track and organize groceries. There's information on the best way to store foods in the ICE, as well as a feature that tracks expiration dates and alerts you when stuff goes rotten.

Food isn't the only thing that gets the once-over. A digital schedule, calendar and memo pad allow you to store your own messages or reminders in voice or text format. And thanks to a transmitter that connects to your home entertainment system, a radio tuner and two speakers, you can listen to music, channel surf or watch a DVD without leaving the kitchen.

Available at Lowe's, $3,499; www.samsung.com



5 The Enano: Lean, Green and Clean

Argue all you want that desktops have style. The fact that most folks let them languish amidst the dust bunnies speaks volumes about their visual appeal and aesthetic value. But now Enano Computers has an alternative: a slim, powerful PC that begs to be kept above board, where you work.

At a petite six inches by six inches, the Enano is half as big as Dell's thinnest desktop computer: Just two inches thick, it tips the scales at three pounds. That makes the Enano light—but no lightweight. The device can run Microsoft Windows Vista and sports an Intel Core2 Duo processor. It features up to two gigabytes of memory, a 240-gig hard drive, wireless networking cards and even an embedded TV tuner. Most impressive: It's ecofriendly, consuming 78 percent less power than standard desktops.

Enano was launched in 2006 as a "boutique" computer brand that's earth-conscious and reduces the pull on natural resources from energy-hungry technology, says Bill Reh, the company's chief operating officer. Reh sees the Enano as a tech-industry equivalent of trendy green cars like the Toyota Prius.

Available online at Amazon.com, Buy.com, TheChipMerchant.com and eCost.com, $750–$2,900; www.enanocomputers.com

4 iRobot Scooba: Let the Robot Do It

Before Burlington firm iRobot came around, the work-weary homemaker had two options for keeping floors spick-and-span: Get down and dirty or hire a cleaning person. Since the introduction of the Roomba vacuum in 2002, however, there's been a third choice: Buy a robot to do the job for you. Since its release in 2002, iRobot has sold more than 2 million Roombas worldwide.

The company released a floor-washing version in late 2005. Like its cleaning cousin, Scooba navigates your home on its own, avoiding stairwells, walls, corners and pets. The device uses water and a Clorox cleaning solution to scour sealed hardwood or tile floors and linoleum. You simply empty the dirty water when it's finished.

Let's face it: After a workweek stewing away in a cubicle, nothing says "do it later" like pushing a mop. So kick back and call in the Scooba.

Available at Target, Sears, Linens 'N Things, Sharper Image, and Bed, Bath and Beyond, $299.99–$399.99; www.irobot.com

6 Possio Greta GSM Fax/Printer: Turducken for the Home Office

Multifunction devices that combine printers, fax machines, scanners and other useful office gizmos are life- and space savers. But stylish? No way. In fact, these combo tools are so universally frumpy you can almost hear the design engineers saying, "Hey, I just crammed a printer into a phone into a fax into a scanner. Now you want it to look good, too?"

Judging by the reaction from Greta, a new combo device from Swedish firm Possio, the answer is "Yes." Simply put, Greta is gorgeous. Unveiled at the 3GSM World Conference in February, it's a printer, fax, telephone, scanner and copier that measures 11 inches by six inches and weighs 35 ounces. It connects to your computer through a USB port, as well as to GSM mobile devices using the Siemens MC55 or 56 controller. Greta will be released in the third quarter of 2007, but Possio is giving away one a month until it hits the shelves.

Deciding to move in together is only the first step toward creating a peaceful home. Next comes the combining of stuff. We interviewed Boston-area couples to see how they made the mix work. A Ouija board, a tulip-filled green vase and a bulldog named Tank were just three of the near casualties of cohabitation. The board, the vase and Tank all stayed. But not without compromise. Tank, for one, no longer has free reign.

TWO WORLDS COLLIDE WHEN COUPLES COHABITATE—
BUT WHOSE STUFF WINS?

Nicole and Chad Keefe chose their brown leather couches together. Their bulldog Tank is allowed on the sofa, but the bed is off limits.

When it comes to moving in together, never mind the emotional baggage; there's enough literal luggage to contend with.

Not just suitcases and steamer trunks, either. There's the heirloom hutch or that Makita power tools pinup poster, both near-and-dear to some member of a burgeoning partnership. New twosomes must decide on their home's governing aesthetic: cluttered piles, clean lines or somewhere in between.

How does a couple handle the melding of their personal belongings? How do they accommodate different tastes? To put it bluntly: How do they decide what to chuck? To better understand the skirmishes, combat zones and lines drawn on the living room floor, we interviewed Boston-area pairs who recently made the leap to cohabitation.

At stake: more than whether his collection of Lord of the Rings tchotchkes clashes with her Ikea meets shabby-chic master plan.

Couples, to your stations! And remember: One of you might win the battle, but the other could win the war.

Jessica Ortiz let Bob Salley keep his grandmother's Ouija board. But a Clint Eastwood poster got the boot.

MUST GO!

motivation: She got to keep a coffee table handmade for her by her ex. "I guess the bargaining took an unexpected turn," she explains.

Indeed, the ghosts of past loves haunt dwellings around the city.

"Something that had meaning in a past relationship—do I bring it into this one?" pondered Green. He was careful not to feel "tainted or corrupted" by items like a painting that his old girlfriend didn't like.

When couples join forces, squabbles about, say, hanging framed art can be more about maintaining personal identity than beauty. One twosome took three years to finally combine their CDs and books. Adair was careful to give Green time to be in the apartment alone and arrange his things.

Another solution to decoration debates: separate offices. Green's is a jumble of books and an elliptical machine; Adair's is a poetry-writing studio with perfectly arranged bookshelves that would make Emily Dickinson drool.

"I ask him once in a while, 'What do you feel? Does it feel like your place?'" Adair says.

It probably helps that the furnishings are neither his nor hers. "We have been buying things together," Adair says.

TURF BATTLES

Mark your territory: It's the law of the jungle. And major territorial issues arise when one person moves nto another's home," says one wary woman (who chose :o remain anonymous for this article). "It can really be a relationship killer."

To avoid a cat-and-dog fight when a couple starts sharng a home, "Move into a new apartment together," was he advice Dana Wynne's mother gave her. Wynne, 29, ived in the South End for two years before her boyfriend, Raul Cordova, 33, a freelance architectural drafter, left he Fens to cohabit in her 'hood.

To make the transition smoother, they found a fresh place they could equally call their own. It also helped to give each other space—literally. ("We decided the kitchen was his domain," says Wynne.)

Cordova's son lives with them on weekends, which presents another space issue for the couple. So does the boy's turtle, Tortuga, and his aquarium in the corner of the living room.

"Tortuga's not my favorite part of the house," Wynne says. "I'd rather have a chair there." As a graphic designer and an art collector, Wynne got to decide, mostly, what art got hung on the walls—some of it questionable, in Cordova's eyes.

"We have Mickey Mouse [pleasuring himself] above the bed," says Cordova.

In the beginning, Wynne felt she had to take a stand about her things to establish her independence. By now, early battles have faded. "After two months," she says, "you forget why it was even important."

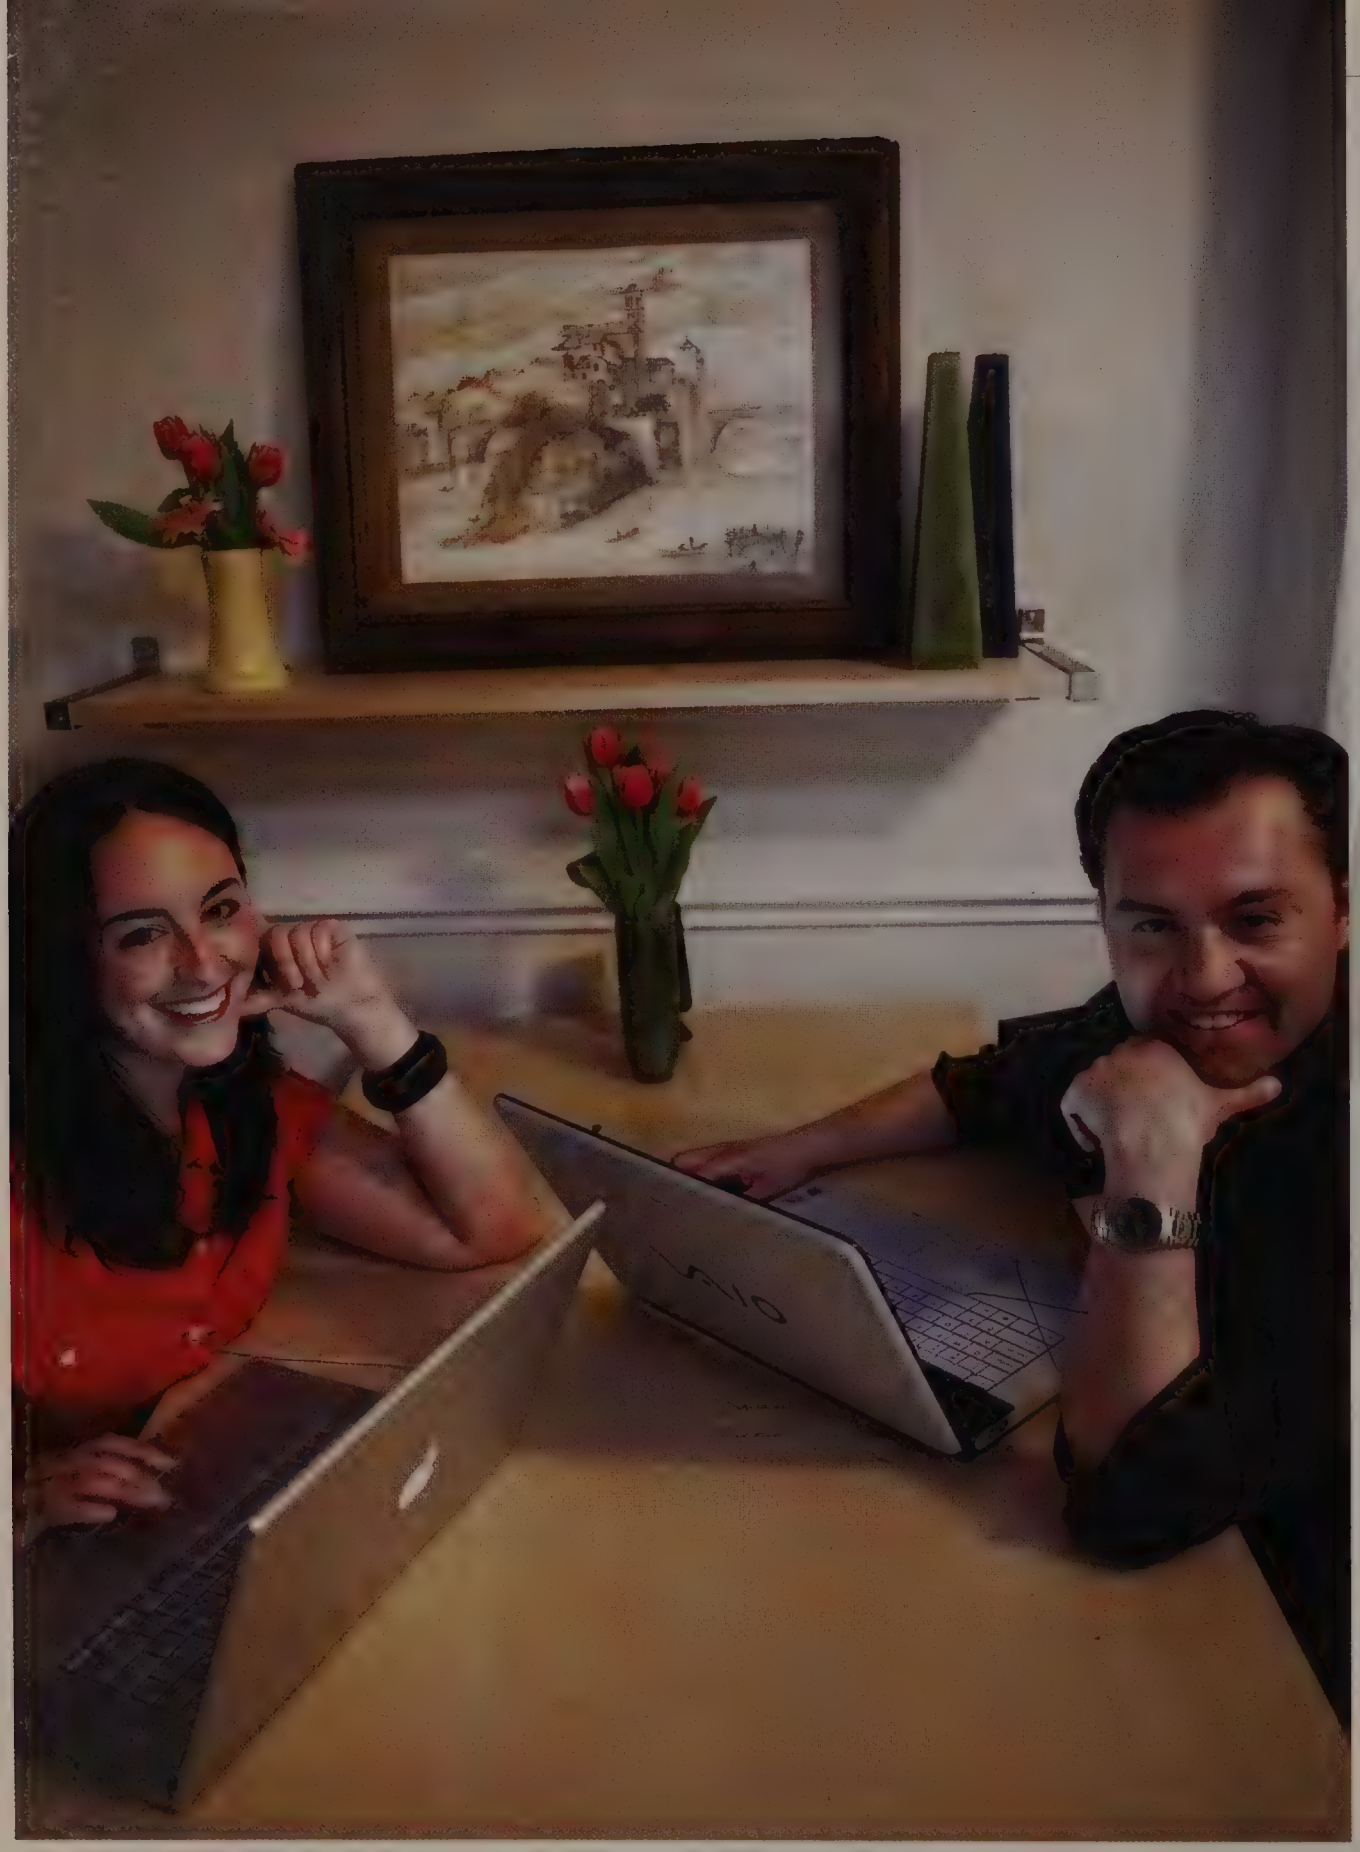
GHOSTS IN THE CLOSET

The flip side to finding that demilitarized zone is when one member of a couple moves into established turf. That person can feel like an interloper.

Allie Adair, 30, a literature professor residing in the same Inman Square apartment with a string of roommates over five years, says she had "had enough of Bob Marley posters" when she invited Max Green, 37, her first live-in partner, to join her a year ago.

"[We] definitely did some negotiating," Adair says. One of Green's "most favorite" things: a huge, historical grade-school map of the United States, like you'd see above a classroom blackboard. Green wanted it over the couch in the living room, and Adair relented. Possible

WHAT TO CHUCK



According to Bob Salley, a facilities coordinator, moving in with Jessica Ortiz, a hotel sales manager, to a North End apartment was "a bold move." Both 30, they'd only known each other for five months. It was also the first living-together situation for both of them. They quickly learned about the fine art of mixing things—and the attendant compromises.

Case in point: Salley brought a Ouija board. "I was spooked and didn't want it in our new apartment," says Ortiz. But it was the only sentimental thing of his grandmother's that he owned. "So we kept it, and it's now on a mantel in our kitchen."

Next tiff: They had their eye on an overstuffed chair, but it only came in light green or beige corduroy. Ortiz knew it would clash with their red sofa, but Salley needed to see it for himself. "It lasted one night," she says. They returned it and got one that was more to her liking. (Word of warning: "People get divorced in IKEA," Salley says.)

Ortiz has more clothes, and now "she's starting to do the Germany and Poland thing: moving into my territory," Salley quips about his minuscule closet space. He also relented in letting her make the bathroom "girly."

She's starting to do the Germany and Poland thing: moving into my territory," Bob Salley quips about sharing his minuscule closet space.

Dana Wynne and Raul Cordova moved into a new apartment that they both could call their own.

After two months," Dana Wynne says of turf battles, "you forget why it was even important."

While she vetoed a Clint Eastwood movie poster, she let Salley hang baseball memorabilia in the living room. And one decorating decision was a nod to a potential future in-law: the painting of a seascape Salley did as a teenager, prominently displayed in the bedroom. "I had to hang it," Ortiz says. "I didn't want to incur his mother's wrath."

"[Jessica] gave me some stuff to make me feel good," Salley sighs. "Even if I win a battle, I lose. A victory is a defeat."

HOUSE RULES

Establishing house rules—TV in the bedroom? Dog on the bed? Video games in the den?—while initially a sore spot, pays off in the end. Chad Keefe's family owns a funeral home in Arlington. Above the business was, in Keefe's word, a "a bach pad, a dump." When he and his wife, Nicole, both 28, got married, they renovated the apartment and chose furnishings like brown leather couches and a gas fireplace. They didn't save much from their previous, separate lives.

"A lot of the stuff from my old house is still in boxes. I had so much crap," Nicole says. As for the new look, "Besides the electronics, there was not much he cared about." Except, Chad adds, that he didn't like "that stupid thing, that green vase."

On Valentine's Day, he gave Nicole a surprise. "I came home one day to find this on the wall": She gestures toward a 50-inch flat-screen TV. "He'll sit and play PlayStation, and I'll watch TV in the bedroom."

As for Tank, their dog? According to Chad, "He's not allowed on the bed—anymore."

MATTERS OF TASTE

Thomas Marzahl and Véronique Lemire know their days in the States are limited. They moved here from Paris so Lemire could pursue an MBA at Harvard, so the Cambridgeport apartment where they've lived for the past year and a half has been something of a training ground. One point of friction: their attitude towards collecting things.

Marzahl, 40, is a self-avowed pack rat. He loves putting photos on the fridge. Lemire, 30, craves simplicity. She hates "all the cables" from electronics "running around," or what she calls "wire mess."

"He has a stone collection," Lemire complains. "The urgency of these issues heightens when the space diminishes."

Smack-dab in the living room, Marzahl's desk is smaller than the work-at-home freelance journalist would've liked. But, like many men, for him appearances aren't that important.

"Véronique's taste tends toward 'If I only had a pocketbook that contained more cash,'" deadpans Marzahl. "I tend toward the functional."

"What looks good" versus "what works" is a timeless debate. For the couple, items as simple as frying pans have caused conflict.

"Thomas has Indian décor," Lemire notes, pointing to a tapestry hanging on the kitchen wall. But in their next place, she'd like a change of scenery. "I'd like to have less Indian and more Chinese."

When the couple moves to Berlin in August, not only will they have to downsize their Boston possessions, they'll sort through stuff in storage scattered from Paris to Rouen to Brussels—and finally decide what they can live without.

"We're going to have battles starting in July," predicts Lemire.

Neither of them looks forward to the process. Marzahl has proposed one solution: "Anyone for a Buddhist renunciation of possessions?" IB

BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY

THE WHOLE NINE LITERARY YARDS

Telling True Stories*, edited by Mark Kramer and Wendy Call of Harvard's Nieman Foundation, contains nearly 100 essays on the elements of writing.

From Harvard's prestigious Nieman Conference on Narrative Journalism come words of writerly wisdom. Anyone interested in tapping the computer keys in an informative, possibly personal, engaging, complex way will find a trove of tips from famous journalists, narrative and otherwise. Short chapters delve into the myriad elements of nonfiction style. On setting the scene, Mark Kramer talks about the figurative camera angles an author uses, blending inner and outer viewpoints, and recommends "austere timing," arriving sharply at the right now. Philip Lopate, writing about the personal essay, notes, "The 'I' swarms with a lush sticky past." Debra Dickerson looks at character and voice in her subjects, including the way they blend and swerve into her own self. Emily Hiestand muses on the quality of detail, style and poetry a writer brings to a story, which "honors the senses—presenting sea smoke ghosting over a lake; a cool plum; the whir of a fan." Discussing details and self-revelation, plus the contradictions in story structuring, Adrian Nicole LeBlanc describes the intimacy of lengthy involvement and fruitful confusion that inform her relationships with subjects. Editors, ethics, book contracts and making an actual career of writing also are covered.

FRESH FISH

In business since 1928, New Deal Fish Market (622 Cambridge St., Cambridge; 617-876-8227) sells good-looking, glistening seafood.

New Deal is one of those rare markets that manage to combine the highest-quality food with exuberant friendliness, great service and in-depth knowledge of the product. Sharing the stage, the finest domestic and imported fish adorn an icy mountain, while president/owner Carl Fantasia and his family chat about seafood and life with customers. On Saturdays, patrons—many of them Japanese—line up for sushi-grade tuna, salmon and yellow tail, which New Deal cuts and fillets right there under rushing water (so "they see how fresh it is," Fantasia says), bundling up the head, skin and bones as stock for making miso soup. That ethnic, salt-of-the-sea flavor is imparted by stretchy pieces of dried baccala, an Italian and Portuguese favorite whose preparation involves days of soaking. New Deal also offers specialty products, including seafood-specific spices in little packets (anise, high-quality oils, spicy Thai mayonnaise). The gorgeous fish include huge octopus, squid (New Deal will de-ink it), Alaskan black cod, shrimp of all sizes, mussels, wild striped sea bass, fluke and flounder. Green sea urchin oozes luscious yellow roe. Taste-test New Deal's offerings alongside some plastic-wrapped seafood, and the difference just leaps off your tongue.

LET THE SPIRIT MOVE YOU

The Peace Abbey (2 North Main St., Sherborn; 508-650-3659; www.peaceabbey.org) honors faith and pacifism, offering vigils, meditation, a retreat center, peace studies, sculptures and texts from 12 major religions.

Equally devoted to opposing war and supporting peace, this former town library in beautiful Sherborn is a sanctuary of spiritual flavors. Founded by conscientious objector Lewis Randa, the Peace Abbey is home to all faiths. ("Pray always. Pray all ways," reads one sign.) Setting the mood, the Brandenburg Concertos and the music of Pachelbel waft gently through its paneled rooms. Conference and meditation spaces are loaded with statues of Buddha, Martin Luther King Jr. and Mother Theresa, who once visited. Outside, an oversized Gandhi dominates a stone peace memorial next to a giant iconic cow, Emily—who also "conscientiously objected" to slaughter by running away and finding refuge here. Back downstairs, wrist tags hang from poles commemorating the first 2,000 soldiers killed in Iraq—and producing shivers. Peace Abbey volunteers have hauled a 1,400-pound stone honoring unknown civilians from Boston to Washington. Activist Carlos Arredondo, whose son was killed in Iraq, sometimes brings his coffin-bearing truck, stocked with crosses, boots, prosthetic devices and crutches, to demonstrations and civil disobedience events. Some snoozy animals—a pig, a huge, gorgeous steer, a white pony and two goats—symbolize the good life force.

REVIEW

MÁS MASA, POR FAVOR

This Southwestern restaurant keeps the foodie flame burning in the South End.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

Mixto ceviche

The South End is to Boston what Lyon is to France and Emilia Romagna is to Italy: a culinary capital. How appropriate that one of the first restaurants you see after crossing over the Mass. Turnpike on Tremont Street is Masa, which has served fine cuisine with a Southwestern flair for more than seven years. Philip Aviles, the talented chef who's helmed Masa's kitchen since it opened, bought the restaurant in 2002 from the original developers. Although the chef/owner has since handed over cooking responsibilities to chef de cuisine Sean Wesoky, Aviles has sustained and enhanced Masa's high standards, maintaining its position of preeminence in this most food-conscious of neighborhoods.

A bevy of devoted regulars make it risky to arrive at the restaurant after 6 pm late in the week without a reservation. Thinking that 6:15 pm on a Saturday was early enough to beat the rush, I arrived and was promptly disabused of this idea. To use the phrase that became the name of a hilarious one-man show a couple of years ago, Masa was "fully committed." When my face fell at the news, the host suggested we head to the bar, where seven high cocktail tables provide no-reservation seating and patrons can order both tapas and full-menu items. There was one table left, and we quickly seized it. Surrounded by legions of 20-somethings (including two couples on one side of us and a foursome of young women on the other), I wondered if Masa's fare could bridge the generation gap. Not to worry. Almost everything we ordered over two enjoyable visits merited accolades, and the food seemed even better than I recalled when I first reviewed the restaurant more than five years ago.

Immediately after we sat down, a server brought a basket of moist cornbread and slices of crusty chipotle ciabatta, accompanied by three different delectable spreads: molasses butter with a haunting, mellow sweetness, white bean purée seasoned with warm, aromatic cumin, and a jalapeño-spiked cojita (Mexican cream cheese). Masa's bar menu offered about 10 tapas for $1 each; we chose the grilled chorizo and the mini-empanada, which arrived together on an elongated white plate. The chorizo consisted of a small, moist and spicy segment of grilled sausage, and the empanada was a remarkably flaky turnover filled with mild, melted cheese. From Masa's selection of 10 first courses, my wife ordered the skillet-roasted scallops and barbecue duck ($12). Three large sea scallops, carefully seared to seal in their impeccably moist, silky texture and preserve their nutty, sweet flavor, came arranged on a long, narrow plate, alternating with two small mounds of smoky, shredded duck. Small pools of sweet corn cream surrounded the scallops, with a rich barbecue sauce for the duck. A garnish of caramelized onions and fried leeks completed the tasty ensemble, along with barbecued beef short rib flautas ($9), a pair of flour tortillas rolled around tender, meaty ribs that had been braised on the bone in a rich, chili-laced sauce. Their hearty beef flavor, which stood up well to the robust spicing, made me forgive the thick, doughy tortilla cocoons in which they were wrapped. A tangy Southwestern coleslaw, slightly smoky and pleasantly citric, provided a good foil for the richness of the beef.

No heaviness marred the mixto ceviche ($11). This sprightly mélange of salmon, mahi mahi and shrimp, all "cooked" by a marinade of tropical citrus mojo, came in a crisp red tortilla shell shaped like a fluted bowl that in the dim light looked like a red bell pepper. Tossed with fresh arugula and ripe melon, the combination offered an imaginative, delicate and refreshing way to begin a meal. Two dozen clean, sweet pan-roasted mussels ($9) arrived in a smoked-tomato and cilantro mole made from peppers, tomatoes and nuggets of cashews that, combined with the mussel liquid, created a rich and nuanced broth.

The dozen main courses at Masa included four with seafood, seven with meat and one vegetarian. Of the seafood, the blackened rare ahi tuna steak ($24) took top prize. Rather than traditionally blackened, it had been seared on the outside over a hot flame to preserve its rare, luscious texture and delicate flavor. Enhanced by yellow mole, Mexico's signature sauce, the tuna profited as well from its garnish of sautéed Yukon gold potatoes and wild mushrooms. This dish (Aviles' signature) has been on Masa's menu since the restaurant opened, a longevity that testifies to its first-rate flavors and textures. Another seafood option, the roasted salmon with a chipotle-horseradish crust ($19), brought a thick filet on a bed of cilantro-accented cucumbers cut into small cubes somewhere between chopped and diced—a refreshing counterpoint to the richness of the fish. Layered on the salmon, a slice of horseradish-encrusted yucca supported a scoop of crème fraîche with salmon caviar on top. The smooth crème fraîche, slightly resilient salmon eggs, crusty yucca and moist fish presented a variety of textures and tastes that played like a symphony in the mouth and on the palate.

Moving to the meat side of the main courses, the pork shoulder ($23) came, ironically, with a heavy-duty steak knife. In fact, the pork had been braised in Negra Modelo (a Mexican dark beer) until so soft and tender it shredded at the ouch of a fork. Served with very moist, pepper-flavored polenta in a chili reduction, the meat was further complemented by the accompanying dollops of port-piked fig jam. Finally, Southwestern-tyle steak frites ($22), a robustly flavored flank steak (tender from a lengthy marinade and slicing on the bias) fully atisfied my beef craving, its robust flavor tanding up to the guajillo (a dried chili) bourbon sauce that covered it. And a hicket of thin, crispy french fries lightly dusted with chili pepper turned a standard, sometimes banal dish into something quite special.

Masa's portions left little room for dessert, but we did manage to sample the chocolate truffle (whimsically referred to as a chocolate tamale) and the diablo banana bread pudding (both $8). The chocolate, served in a cornhusk bowl—hence its nickname—delivered rich, intense chocolate flavor, which was enhanced by a scoop of vanilla-bean ice cream. The bread pudding, taking its devilish name from a liberal infusion of cinnamon and chili, had fiery-sweet overtones that reminded me of the candy Red Hots. Tequila liqueur sauce added a pleasantly provocative dimension to this confection as well.

The wine list, a little thin in the lower price ranges, offered a decent selection of wines by the glass. The 2005 Alamos malbec ($7), big and tannic, did justice to the spicy food. Casa Silva Chilean cabernet sauvignon ($8) combined well-balanced fruit and acidity, softened tannins, a marvelous bouquet and an elegant finish. The third in the trio of Southern Hemisphere wines, a big fleshy syrah, proved a great companion for the steak frites.

Masa's interior, unchanged since the restaurant's opening in 1999, is nicely designed and attractive to the eye, though the minimal light provided by hanging lanterns and candle sconces ensures that the décor won't draw attention away from the food. A high room divider, made even higher by a thicket of potted vegetation, bisects the bar and cocktail area from the long, narrow dining room, whose walls are lined by booths for parties of two, four or six, with small tables somewhat crowded in between. Impeccable service reigned on both of our visits—especially on a busy Saturday night, when we advised our waitress that we were a little pressed for time. Energetic and upbeat, she served us with efficiency and grace and showed the same attentiveness and responsiveness to other patrons; similarly, the restaurant manager demonstrated the very soul of hospitality, making the rounds to pay brief, unobtrusive visits to diners. Not only did I enjoy superlative food at this Southwestern outpost, I was made to feel more like a guest than a customer. iB

DISH

From Sous Chef to Blu Chef

Menu gets a workout at Sportsclub/L.A.

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Back when Michael Kraus worked with Eric Brennan in the early years at The Federalist, "over the top" was the bottom line. The rhetorical question, he says, was "How many expensive things can we put together on one plate?" When Kraus and Brennan cooked together at the Harvest, says Kraus, their approach was more "streamlined, with fewer pans and less on the plate."

Now Brennan heads up the kitchen at Excelsior, and Kraus has been promoted to the position of executive chef at Blu. He's in the process of overhauling the menu while the restaurant is in the midst of renovations aimed at uniting the bar and dining room spaces—and ultimately presenting a more relaxed, affordable option for diners.

Say good-bye to white tablecloths and a menu focused on fine-dining formality (and prices). Say hello to the requisite new menu of "small plates" priced between $5 and $8, including "fried calamari, crispy duck wings, polenta fries with truffled fonduta, steamed mussels and grilled flatbread," says Kraus.

As for the dinner menu, which will be redesigned in a one-page format, Kraus says he'll "bring the price point down a little bit, to make it more approachable for the average diner." But that won't mean "average" fare; Kraus describes his cooking style as influenced by the Mediterranean cuisines of Spain, Italy and southern France.

"I don't do Asian influence, yuzu and stuff like that," he says. "I love to work with the farms; for me, it's all about local. Pat Woodbury starts to harvest clams next week!"

Expect to see those clams on Kraus' new menu, as well as dishes such as pan-roasted lamb leg with asparagus, favas, spring onions, herbed polenta and toasted pistachios; grilled swordfish with warm potato salad, broccoli rabe and black-olive vinaigrette; and whole-wheat ricotta cavatelli with wild mushrooms, asparagus, aged balsamic and shaved Grana-Padano.

IT'S ALL GOOD... FOR THE ENVIRONMENT

Where's Boston's very first 100 percent eco-friendly wine list? Cambridge? Jamaica Plain? The South End? No, no and no. Thanks to wine director Rachel Schwolow, Ashmont Grill in Dorchester now boast the city's—and possibly New England's—first list of organic, biodynamic and sustainable wines. And thanks to Schwolow's credentials—she was formerly employed at Little Nell in Aspen—inclusion on the list is based on taste and value as well as environmental appeal. Wines by the glass range from $6 to $12; bottles are priced from $2[illegible] to $49.

CONGRATULATIONS, EVERYBODY!

It's time for the James Beard Foundation Awards again, and this year's nominees include more than a handful of local luminaries. In the category of Best Chef: Northeast three Boston-area chefs—Frank McClelland of L'Espalier, Marc Orfaly of Pigall[illegible] and Michael Leviton of Lumière in Newton—share nomination honors with three chefs from Maine (Clark Frasier and Mark Gaier of Arrows in Ogunquit and Rob Evans of Hugo's in Portland). Chef Patrick Connelly of Radius is in the running for Rising Star Chef of the Year. In the cookbook division, Spice, by Ana Sortun of Oleana, is nominated in the International category. iB

Music: What Rieu Can Do for You

It's not every day a classical music concert gets extra play in the pages of the IMPROPER. So when it does, you know it's a good one. Enter André Rieu, the Dutch violinist and conductor who performs at Boston University's Agganis Arena April 12. Rieu's not your typical composer, so when he takes the stage in front of the Johann Strauss Orchestra, don't sink into your seat. Why? One word: dancing. Rieu's known for encouraging the crowd to cut a rug. We're talking serious waltzing in the aisles. If you're that guy whose wife's been begging to go dancing or to the theater, consider this a pain-free double feature. Agganis Arena, 925 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-931-2000). www.agganisarena.com. 7:30 pm. $65. —RL

The Axis of Evil

Sing along with Buffy at the Coolidge

Movies: Buffy Does Prom

Break out the taffeta dresses, spike heels—and plastic fangs. You're invited to a Buffy-themed prom, as in television's favorite vampire slayer, at the Coolidge Corner Theatre. Get in a Buffy state of mind, singing along to the now-canceled show's oft-mocked musical episode, "Once More With Feeling," presented on the big screen. (Think Rocky Horror Picture Show for the MTV generation.) Then head to the Coolidge's dance floor (aka the stage), where DJ Clinton McClung will spin pop songs, along with makeout classics like "Stairway to Heaven." This is no imitation prom, however: A king and queen will be crowned amidst the streamers and balloons, and during the dance diehard fans can prove their devotion in a trivia competition. Coolidge Corner Theatre, 290 Harvard St., Brookline (617-734-2500). www.coolidge.org. $12.

Comedy: Off Their Axis

Egyptian-American comedian Ahmed Ahmed says he always knows how to pick out the air marshall on a flight: "It's the guy who's reading People magazine upside down and is looking right at me." Ahmed says other funny things too, and he'll be saying them onstage in Boston April 13, when the Axis of Evil Comedy Tour makes its way to the Berklee Performance Center. The tour features a lineup of American comedians with Middle Eastern roots—aside from Ahmed, the show is headlined by Iranian-American Maz Jobrani and Palestinian-American Aron Kader—who rap about their lives in post-9/11 America. Considering the attention they've scored of late (including their own Comedy Central special), now's the time to go. Berklee Performance Center, 136 Mass. Ave., Boston (617-931-2000). www.axisofevilcomedy.com. 8 pm. $33. —RL

Zili Misik

SAT./APRIL 7 AND FRI./APRIL 20

Music: Rocker Chicks

Want to play Paula, Randy and Simon for a night? American Idol isn't the only place showcasing chicks with killer pipes. Check out some local talent during the final round of Berklee College of Music's first-ever Battle of the All-Female bands. The contenders (all Berklee students and alums) strut their stuff at the Middle East April 7. Zili Misik, Aurora, Cliché, the Smoke Animals and Burn Chesca Burn are up for the title, picked by a panel of judges. Among other prizes, the winners will open for '70s girl group Fanny—who broke new ground when they released a record on a major label—at RockrGrl's Women of Valor Evening at Berklee April 20. April 7, Middle East, 472 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-492-9181). 1 pm. $3-$5. All ages. April 20, Berklee Performance Center, 1140 Boylston St., Boston (617-747-2261). 8:15 pm. $15. —Julia Gall

FRI./APRIL 13

Books: Chef Nonpareil

ura Shapiro

Before Martha, Rachael and Giada, there was Julia. The kooky connoisseur of all things tasty—and French, bien sur—paved the way for today's celebrity chefs and dominated the industry for more than 40 years. Now, three years after her death, the pioneer's path to stardom is documented in food writer Laura Shapiro's biography, Julia Child. Shapiro explores the glamorous and not-so-glamorous aspects of Child's career and life—from her Asia stint during WWII to cooking classes at Le Cordon Bleu Paris to the making of her Boston-born TV show, The French Chef. Get a signed copy at Porter Square Books April 13, while Shapiro answers your questions about the culinary world's most missed maven. *Porter Square Books, 25 White St., Cambridge (617-491-2220). 7 pm. Better Than the Real Thing

Hot Fuzz mimics action movies in a parody for film buffs.

BY SEAN BURNS

Simon Pegg and Edgar Wright's Hot Fuzz, the breathlessly anticipated follow-up to their 2004 cult classic Shaun of the Dead, is for all intents and purposes, a one-joke movie. Luckily for them, it's a pretty good joke.

A cheeky, affectionate sendup of Hollywood's testosterone-crazed summer action movie extravaganzas, Fuzz stars Pegg as Sergeant Nicholas Angel, a tightly wound London supercop who's earning plenty of resentment from his fellow officers. Turns out there actually is such a thing as being too good at your job, and Angel's arrest record is 400 percent higher than that of any other officer. In short, he's making the rest of the force look lazy. A meeting of the station house big shots turns into a who's-who of contemporary British comedy, as The Office's Martin Freeman, Steve Coogan and that favorite old poker face Bill Nighy all conspire to get the overzealous lad transferred out of their hair, posthaste.

The police officers in Hot Fuzz find big-budget action movies an easy target.

Their solution involves transferring Angel to the sleepy little town of Sandford, which has won countless village-of-the-year awards from well-respected periodicals, and would seem on the surface to have absolutely no crime whatsoever. The bullet-headed, all-business Angel predictably doesn't mesh well with the residents. Veteran scene-stealer Jim Broadbent heads up the local police force with an affable jocularity, even providing a patrol job to his thick-witted son Danny, played with goofy bovine charm by Pegg and Wright's regular collaborator Nick Frost.

Angel's Jack Webb routine is a bad match for a town in which the biggest emergency is a missing swan, and Hot Fuzz gets a fair amount of comic mileage from this admittedly thin premise. The killer cast is responsible for a lot of the goodwill. Two-time James Bond Timothy Dalton costars as a smarmy supermarket owner who passes himself off as a pillar of the community, but seems to have nefarious intentions lurking beneath his silly mustache. Who knew Dalton was capable of such delightful self-mockery? Speaking of silly mustaches, there's also a deft comic turn from the great Irish actor Paddy Considine, here slugging back too many pints of Guinness as a surly veteran detective who seems to have lifted his entire manner and bearing from bad 1970s American cop shows.

The hyperalert, prickly Angel still suspects there's something fishy about this storybook community, and with Danny supplying a hefty amount of dead weight as his partner, our hero begins digging into some awfully strange statistics. It turns out Sandford has the lowest crime rate in England, and yet the place seems positively overrun with bizarre, grisly accidents. Is it all just coincidence, or maybe a conspiracy?

Much like Shaun of the Dead, Hot Fuzz is a movie made for and by people who have seen way too many movies. The humor lies not so much in the actual gags, but in the way the filmmakers mimic every stale action-movie trope of the past 15 years, transposing big-gun macho filmmaking techniques from countless urban adventures to a quaint rural village. The sight of scrawny, geeky Pegg loading up a ton of machine guns while portly Frost sails through the air firing pistols in slow motion is alone worth the price of admission. Director Edgar Wright has really done his homework here, using just the right syncopated crash-cuts, bombastic hero-worship camera angles and comically overblown explosions. After seeing Hot Fuzz, I doubt it'll be possible to keep a straight face during a Michael Bay movie again, assuming one could ever do so in the first place.

And therein lies the rub. For all of Hot Fuzz's brilliant, spot-on imitations and giant giggles of recognition, it's not exactly tough to parody a genre that's already a cartoon. Wright's Shaun of the Dead took a similar tack with George Romero movies, but that earlier film had a catchier hook, starring Pegg and Frost as layabout slackers so caught up in their own relationship problems that it took half-an-hour before they even noticed the dearly departed brain-eaters lurking in their midst. Dropping lovestruck, half-drunk navel-gazing lads into a horror film was genuinely novel, almost as if Nick Hornby wrote a zombie flick.

Hot Fuzz is, by its very nature, detached from Shaun's workaday reality, so it can't strike the same emotional chords. It's best viewed as a collection of inside jokes, and movie buffs can spend hours afterwards pouring over all the winks, nods and references. Keep your eyes peeled for a cameo by Cate Blanchett in disguise, and yes, that's original Wicker Man star Edward Woodward working a riff on his previous role.

Hot Fuzz lacks the surprise and delight of Shaun of the Dead, but it's tough to complain about a movie in which Lord of the Rings director Peter Jackson shows up as a knife-wielding Santa Claus. IB

Breach ★★★

The tale of traitor Robert Hanssen is a fascinatir often embarrassing chunk of recent histo brought to the big screen with surprising em tional texture and fine attention to detail writer-director Billy Ray. A poker-faced a seething Chris Cooper carries himself with an most overwrought rigidity, signaling untold ter pests behind his eyes. In Cooper's brilliantly phy cal interpretation of the character, Hansse abruptness and fanatical Catholicism appear to the only things keeping untold demons in chec He's a volcano ready to blow. Ryan Phillippe hol his own as a cocky junior agent in over his hea placed front and center for a massive FBI sting o eration. Shattered Glass director Ray has a re knack for portraying adults roaming the corrido of power; white-collar intrigue suits him. But f all his formidable gifts when it comes to charact and performance, his visual technique falls som where in the vicinity of boring competence. R doesn't seem to think in pictures, and in the en unforgettable images are what separate the gre movies from good ones. (At Boston Commo Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Children of Men ★★★★

My pick for the best picture of 2006, Alfonso Cu rón's Children of Men is the kind of movie you or thought they didn't make anymore. A ruthless, a grily politicized piece of speculative science fi tion that conveniently doubles as an edge-of-yo seat chase thriller, the film uses a dark vision the future to critique the way we're living rig now. As in the best sci-fi, the film feels more to cally and emotionally keyed into our current, u easy cultural moment than any present-tense ta possibly could. In a frighteningly believable futu London after a worldwide infertility crisis has se civilization into a violent tailspin, Clive Ow gives a magnificent old-school Humphrey Boga performance, shepherding humanity's last ho through a bombed-out battleground and redisco ering depths of compassion and valor he forgot even had. Cuarón and his brilliant cinematogr pher, Emmanuel Lubezki, have rewritten the ru of the action film, shooting exclusively with ava able light and in a succession of long, miraculous unbroken camera movements, thus lending nerve-wracking real-time anxiety to the proce ings. (At Arlington and in the suburbs.)

Color Me Kubrick ★★

Running barely an hour and 20 minutes yet st twice as long as it needs to be, this gaudy, awfu strained farce riffs on the stranger-than-ficti case of Alan Conway, a con-man who helped hi self to a lot of free booze and young boys in Lo don during the early 1990s simply by claiming be reclusive, seldom-photographed filmmak Stanley Kubrick. John Malkovich portrays the f hustler with a variety of horrid American accer and even more ill-advised fashion choices, gna ing away at every bit of scenery this low-budg production can afford. Amusing at first, the mov incorporates some of Kubrick's signature mus cues into unlikely scenarios, as when Conway u nates on the train tracks to the strains of 200 Also Sprach Zarathustra. But Color Me Kubrick so devolves into the same damn scene over and ov again, never allowing us inside the soul of th great pretender, and missing the satirical zing o might expect from an indictment our celebrity-o sessed culture. After all the mincing and carryi on, it's just an extended anecdote. (At Kend Square.)

The Host ★★★½

Part Friday-night monster movie, part dysfun tional family saga, with a healthy dollop of misa thropic social satire tossed into the mix, Bo Joon-ho's The Host is a seriously funny, frighte ingly relevant, altogether smashingly entertaini riff on contemporary fears and anxieties. Sort like what might happen if Godzilla attacked th Royal Tenenbaums, this roller coaster ride cha the redemption of one severely mixed-up broo while a gigantic reptilian tortoise-looking creatu stomps its way through South Korea, eating pe ple. Bong's last film was the sly genre mash Memories of Murder, and here he continues to fi absurd comedy and humanity in the unlikeliest settings. The Host veers into Dr. Strangelove ter tory upon the arrival of the American army, smu gling quite a few snarky geopolitical allegories in the wildest creature feature you'll see all ye Bonus points go to young actress Bae Du-na, th deadpan dynamo who toplined the Brattle's rece ve Linda Linda Linda. She's one of the flat-out nniest screen presences in movies right now. Jim rmusch needs to write her a starring role, stat. t Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Think I Love My Wife ★★

's the most gifted standup comic of his genera-n, but Chris Rock can't seem to catch a break nen it comes to movies. He should probably stop ing to direct these things himself. One of those cks you like more for what it's trying to be than at it actually is, I Think I Love My Wife remixes c Rohmer's Chloe in the Afternoon with a healthy mpling of stand-up material from both Rock and coscreenwriter Louis C.K. Our comedian stars as arried, well-to-do investment banker sleepwalk-g through his marriage and tempted by a vixen ne fantastic Kerry Washington) from his past. ere's a lot to be said for Rock's aim to craft an up-le, morally-grounded adult comedy focused on l-world relationship issues, especially when so ny of his SNL alums seem content to coast on y slapstick. But despite some insightful writing, e film feels amateurish and shoddily slapped to-her, its leading man skittish and adrift on the big een. Besides, Rock already covered this same und brilliantly on his 2005 album, Never Scared. t Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

ne Lives of Others ★★★½

rns out East Berlin wasn't such a nice place to e in 1984, a year presumably chosen with a nk and a smile by first-time writer-director Flo-n Henckel Von Donnersmark as the setting for s eerily quiet, breathtakingly suspenseful yarn. rich Muhe delivers a performance of brilliant traint and control as a ruthless Stasi true be-ver, suddenly discovering glimmers of a long-rmant conscience when assigned to shadow a ndamentally decent playwright (Powers Boothe ok-alike Sebastian Koch) who just might be aid-g and abetting some subversive pals during those k days before the wall came crumbling down. miniscent of Francis Ford Coppola's The Con-sation, The Lives of Others is all clammy para-ia and creeping dread, with Muhe's poker-faced n somehow giving you everything and nothing the same time. It's riveting stuff, watching a n discover just how badly his ideals have been twisted and perverted by power-mongering thugs in high places; enough to carry you through this otherwise crisp, understated picture's weird determination to offer more false endings than The Return of the King. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Mafioso ★★½

An engaging curiosity recently unearthed and somewhat inexplicably re-released to theatres, Alberto Lattuada's forgotten 1962 black comedy features Alberto Sordi (star of Fellini's The White Sheik, as well as his immortal I, Vitteloni) playing a blowhard auto-plant efficiency expert in Milan, who drags his unhappy family kicking and screaming on a vacation to his hometown in Sicily with decidedly unexpected results. At that time connected to the mainland only by what appears to be the world's dinkiest power line, our hero's homeland is a comedic goldmine of broad, rustic caricatures that rub uncomfortably against his new famiglia's blond, thoroughly modern manners. But lest you think Sordi's mustachioed sister is the extent of Mafioso's intentions, there's also Ugo Attanasio's cheerfully malevolent Don Vincenzo, who has one not-so-simple errand in mind for our foolhardy protagonist. The late-game shift to dark-edged, violent surrealism is a bit more modern than most pictures of this era, but Lattuada's film is valuable mainly as a footnote, speaking openly about la cosa nostra a full decade before The Godfather. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Music and Lyrics ★★★

Watching Hugh Grant in a romantic comedy these days is sort of like seeing Michael Jordan playing basketball in his prime—there's just such an effortless command and mastery of form it's easy to take the guy for granted. Grant swooshes at least four-dozen one-liners in this unexpectedly delightful music industry send-up, starring as a washed-up 1980s pop icon transparently based on "the other guy" from Wham! After years of touring amusement parks and high school reunions, the rump-shaking cad gets a shot at a big-time comeback thanks to the adoration of a pre-bald Britney-ish pop tart, but Hugh needs scatterbrained "plant lady" Drew Barrymore to write the lyrics for his music. I guess you could call it all predictable chick-flick rom-com stuff, helmed with little visual distinction by writer-director Marc Lawrence. But, at the same time, Grant and Barrymore are simply, wonderfully adorable, hanging back and doing what they're best at. The bubblegum ditties, by Fountains of Wayne's Adam Schlesinger, are the most infectiously hummable movie tunes I've heard since Schlesinger's own "That Thing You Do!" (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Premonition ★½

Sandra Bullock sure seems to be having a lot of trouble with the space-time continuum lately, and this severely downbeat Lifetime-movie plays like the glum underbelly of last year's improbably entertaining The Lake House. Bullock again holds the screen with an unfussy melancholy, and as in that previous picture she's using some stubbornly unexplained metaphysical trickery to try and prevent the death of her beloved in a grisly car accident. But this time around everything's all gloomy and despondent, as Bullock's put-upon hausfrau experiences the worst week of her life in deliberately unchronological order, jumping from Wednesday to Saturday and then back again to Tuesday under a dark cloud of grim portents and malevolent music cues. Bill Kelly's screenplay eventually writes itself into such a corner we're told, rather unconvincingly, that this is all "a question of faith." Director Mennan Yapo seems more interested in jolts and shock cuts, and you're left meditating on Bullock's unique charisma, wondering why Hollywood still hasn't figured out quite what to do with her. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Reign Over Me ★★★

There's always been something closed-off and kind of scary about Adam Sandler's screen persona, and, as was the case with P.T. Anderson's brilliant Punch-Drunk Love, this fumbling effort from writer-director Mike Binder uses the goofball comic's autistic flourishes to dazzling dramatic effect. Sandler stars as a former dentist who lost his family on 9/11 and has spent the ensuing years in a sort of emotional coma, obstinately returning to adolescence as a last resort. It's only upon reuniting with his old college buddy (a phenomenal Don Cheadle) that Sandler's slurry, angry Rain Man finally begins fumbling towards human contact once again. As in his Upside Of Anger, Binder proves himself adept at getting transcendent performances from his actors, only to sell them out with pat, sitcommy resolutions. There's a lot about Reign Over Me that feels phony and contrived, and yet much of it is tough to shake off. This time around, Sandler's idiot man-child routine is just a cover for a world of hurt, one almost impossible to fathom. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Shooter ★★

The Artist Formerly Known As Marky Mark breezes his way through this dopey, paranoid slog, making what should've been an unbearable First Blood knockoff a good deal easier to endure. Based on the first in a series of airport bestsellers by Pulitzer Prize–winning Washington Post film critic Stephen Hunter, Shooter follows Mark Wahlberg's retired supersniper Bob Lee Swagger (dig that name!) as he's played for a patsy in an assassination attempt on the president. Dorchester's favorite son uses a formidable amount of offhand, every-guy charisma to offset the sheer ludicrousness of the scenario. Exacting swift and brutal revenge on the sinister Halliburton-esque cabal led by Ned Beatty's positively Cheney slimeball senator, Wahlberg deliberately and deftly underplays this screenplay's countless goofy flourishes. Director Antoine Fuqua shoots everything in mashed-perspective, telephoto lens closeups that, for a movie about a long-range marksman, is either rank incompetence or willful perversity. Boston Legal's Rhona Mitra costars as an FBI agent who takes every urgent phone call in skimpy underwear. Yes, it's that kind of movie. (At Boston Common, Fenway, and in the suburbs.)

An empty-headed spectacle that leaves a loathsome aftertaste, director Zack Snyder's blockbuster adaptation of the Frank Miller comic book reimagines the Battle of Thermopalaye as a monotonous homoerotic videogame. Gerard Butler hollers himself hoarse as King Leonidas, leading 300 Spartans into an impossible battle with something like a billion Persians, here seen astride mutant elephants at the behest of Rodrigo Santoro's nine-foot-tall Xerxes, who apparently labors under the delusion that he's playing RuPaul. Shot entirely in front of a green screen, with tacky, mocha-colored digital vistas and computer-generated extras added in after the fact, 300 certainly doesn't look like any movie you've seen before. In fact, it doesn't look like a movie at all, but rather a chintzy ad for some mysteriously swarthy, musky product you probably don't want to buy. 300's over-the-top bombast quickly becomes droning, and there's no weight or resonance to Snyder's pixilated imagery. It's just an endless barrage of outlandish violence and campy hyper-masculine posing, pandering to the darkest fantasies of maladjusted prepubescent boys. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Venus ★★★½

Stubborn, foppish legend of stage and screen Peter O'Toole has found his ideal swan song in Venus, Roger Michell's big-hearted and filthy-minded examination of one fussy lion who isn't quite ready for winter. O'Toole gives an extraordinary performance as a worn-out actor who becomes erotically fixated on Jodie Whittaker's vulgar, beer-bellied, 20-something nursemaid. Their fumbling parody of a courtship is fascinating because of all the pat resolutions and expected homilies that Michell and screenwriter Hanif Kurieshi so studiously avoid. Feeling at times like a rebuttal to the polished cutesiness of those Grumpy Old Men movies, Venus has few romantic notions about growing old. The movie is packed with prostate exams, catheters and toenail clippings, always forcefully upfront about the fact that the aging process often consists of one indignity after another. An early sight gag finds the actor springing from a television studio deathbed, firing up a smoke and happily, loudly cursing. It's a blissful little moment that somehow encapsulates this curiously affecting film: lewd misbehavior as a life force. (W. Newton and in the suburbs.)

Wild Hogs ★

Odiously devoted to the ugly comic notion that nothing's more traumatic than being mistaken for a gay man, the latest live-action Disney effort oozes bad jokes and panicked homophobia. Falling stars John Travolta, Tim Allen and Martin Lawrence seem to be surveying the wreckage of their film careers, thinking back to happier days when they could headline their own lousy pictures, instead of having to share the screen on a cross-country motorcycle trip in this shoddily constructed City Slickers knock-off. Garishly over-lit, incompetently directed and rife with unfunny, scatological blunders, the movie finds our portly middle-aged losers in a nonsensical feud with hambone Ray Liotta's rowdy biker gang. A porcine Travolta egregiously overacts, his silly doo-rag hiding one of the year's most hilarious hairpieces. Allen looks bored, and Lawrence seems studiously unwilling to make eye contact with his fellow performers. Leave it to a so-called family entertainment to teach children that violence solves every problem, and that those durned homosexuals sure are silly. Wild Hogs is hateful crap. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Wind That Shakes the Barley ★★★½

Boasting the worst title in the history of motion pictures, famously proletarian director Ken Loach's latest pits brother against brother, trying to find a way around the tormented, ceaselessly debated Anglo-Irish peace accord of 1921. Lacking even a trace of the twee emerald spackle that taints crowd-pleasers like Waking Ned Devine, The Wind is a tough row to hoe, subjecting the audience to brutal Black-and-Tan attacks and the violent psychic disintegration of a once-promising medical student played quite well by Batman Begins' unforgettable psycho Cillian Murphy. A confounding Irish cousin to Steven Spielberg's Munich, The Wind digresses for just long enough to engage every side of a horribly problematic situation, exemplifying the great Jean Renoir line: "That's the terrible thing about life, everybody has his reasons." Loach shoots the madness with characteristic reserve, hanging back in mostly wide shots and eschewing grisly closeups for a larger-scale, more contemplative look at violence, as if it was almost part and parcel of the rough-hewn Irish landscape. A thoughtful and worthwhile film, even if it did ruin my St. Patrick's Day. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Zodiac ★★★★

Hypnotic, confounding and mesmerizing, director David Fincher's slippery meditation on the San Francisco Bay Area's legendary unsolved murders is an experimental art film disguised as a $70 million blockbuster. A swift kick in the teeth to the serial killer genre—which Fincher himself helped create with his 1995 mindblower Seven—Zodiac also serves as a perverse rebuke to the tidy police procedurals clogging your TV schedule. With meticulous adherence to historical records, Fincher chronicles every infuriating misstep, blind alley and bum lead in a case that didn't get very far but left countless lives ruined in its wake. Mark Ruffalo delivers a powerhouse performance as a cop who can't let go, while Robert Downey Jr. steals scenes as a brash, dope-addled crime-beat reporter drawing the killer's ire. Jake Gyllenhaal is outclassed in such company, playing a geeky cartoonist who thinks he can figure it all out alone. Fincher combines period-specific filmmaking techniques with cutting-edge digital video photography to create something eerie and timeless, doggedly insisting that closure is sometimes impossible and the truth is often just plain unknowable. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Patty Griffin harnesses her extremes to hit a new career high.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Patty Griffin invites fans to sing along and dance at her shows. "Theater seating sometimes makes it pretty formal, but I love it when people feel like they can move around a little," says the onetime Bostonian, who plays April 20 at the Orpheum—a huge step from the Lizard Lounge, where a January performance left fans clamoring for nearly impossible-to-get tickets. "The Orpheum actually has a great warm feel, so that theater is the exception. It has an old rock club feel."

Granted, sing-alongs aren't what people usually associate with Griffin, who has made her mark with melancholy alt-country/folk more than rock. Such artists as Emmylou Harris and the Dixie Chicks have covered her songs, the latter scoring with "Top of the World" and "Let Him Fly," which was also recorded (oddly enough) by Jessica Simpson.

But Griffin's critically lauded new disc Children Running Through captures the glorious extremes of her stylistic expression. From the rueful resolve of "You'll Remember" to the punkabilly kiss-off "Getting Ready" to the gospel vehicles "Up to the Mountain (MLK Song)" and the radiant "Heavenly Day," the CD delivers a definitive statement of her talents.

"I'm proud of it," she says, "and my standards are pretty high for things that I like. If you ever listened to an Ella Fitzgerald, Sam Cooke or Aretha Franklin record, it's not one of them!"

Soul singers have long been a primary influence on Griffin, who has grown particularly enamored of Cooke of late and dug into his "Get Yourself Another Soul" at the Lizard. "You forget how amazing those songs are and what they're saying and the emotional content," she says. "They're written to be sung, and they have some long notes for people to play with. They're not wordy. It's much more fun for a singer to sing a Sam Cooke song than a lot of Bob Dylan songs. Bob Dylan songs go by a little too fast for me.

"If you caught any of my sets at Christopher's [in Porter Square] with John Curtis back in the '80s, I was doing Aretha Franklin covers," 42-year-old Griffin continues from her home in Austin, Texas. "[Soul] music has been a great love of mine forever. I kinda turned my back on it for a while 'cause I was proud of my red hair and drawing the Bonnie Raitt comparisons, and I needed to go and study other things. Also, it's a genre of music that a lot of people sing better than I do. But I love singing it."

She found a kindred spirit in producer Mike McCarthy, who had worked with both indie-rockers Spoon and country neo-traditionalist Lee Ann Womack and came recommended by friends for his technical grounding. "I was just hoping to have my voice sound as good as it does in my kitchen," Griffin says. "I mentioned to him how much more I liked the sound of old records than just about anything currently recorded in digital. He's an analog guy, so it was pretty easy to get him onboard."

Not only was McCarthy new to the process; Griffin had exhausted her backlog of songs and needed fresh material to grace the airy sonic territory of Children Running Through. "It had been years since I'd spent that much time writing," she says, "and it appealed to the introvert in me."

The Maine native was so introverted when she moved to Boston from remote Old Town that she avoided performing—until being coaxed by guitar teacher Curtis. "I couldn't wait to get to my lesson so I could actually sing something that I'd written, and he just kept saying, 'You should play,'" says Griffin, who waitressed at Pizzeria Uno in Porter Square, then answered the switchboard at Harvard. "There was a coffeehouse I tried to sing in, an open-mike night, and I was so shy, I could barely make a peep when I got onstage."

Patty Griffin bares her soul on the new disc Children Running Through.

The youngest of seven siblings, she was inspired to sing by her mother, who shared hymns and country songs around the house. "I thought everybody's mom probably sang like that," Griffin says. "And my grandmother was a great singer. She was a soprano in her church."

Other childhood memories from Maine surface in haunting vignettes like the new "Burgundy Shoes," a piano ballad of delicate details. Listening to it, you can picture Griffin in her shoes and plaid dress on a bus trip to Bangor, gazing at her mom's lipstick, spring flowers and the sun. "When you're little, hopefully you're not anxious about very much, so your senses are pretty clear," she says. "Everything is great and new."

Now life is looking fresh for Griffin, whose early career stalled in major-label hell before she harnessed her raw, clarion voice and vision. "I'm having more fun than ever," she says. "This is all I really know how to do. I was a terrible waitress and not a very good telephone operator." IB plays April 20 at the Orpheum Theatre.

IMPROPERAZZI

The Improper Bostonian's client-related promotions and events

On Tuesday, March 13, the Improper Bostonian was a proud sponsor of the Taste of the South End. Guests enjoyed an evening of diverse culinary creations from some of the most celebrated chefs from more than 40 of the South End's finest restaurants. Evening highlights included a raffle and silent auction featuring unique, eclectic food and wine-related items. The event was held at the Boston Center for the Arts Cyclorama and benefited the AIDS Action Committee of Massachusetts.

1. Mitchell Randall, sous chef, and Lisa Flores, special events manager; both at Mistral.
2. Robin King, executive chef, and Evan Deluty, chef/owner; both at Stella
3. Andy Husbands, chef/owner of Tremont 647, an Jack Bardy, owner of Ph Republique.

On Thursday, March 15, Mitchell Gold + Bob Williams hosted a launch party for their new book Let's Get Comfortable. Both authors, Bob Williams and Mitchel Gold were at the event signing copies.

1. Eric Roseff, president of Eric Roseff Designs; Sean Gillespie, corporate employee, and Ryan Donnelly, design associate; both of Mitchell Gold + Bob Williams.
2. Drew Terrat; Barbara Goldberg; Steve Elbaz; all co-owners of Mitchell Gold + Bob Williams Massachusetts; Bob Williams and Mitchell Gold, founders of Mitchell Gold + Bob Williams.
3. Shay Starnes, director of case goods at Mitchell Gold + Bob Williams Corporate, and Dane Bailey, consultant of Boston.

On Wednesday, March 14, Rialto celebrated the opening of the "new" Rialto with chef Jody Adams. Guests enjoyed a beautiful new ambiance, specialty drinks and savory hors d'oeuvres.

1. Ann Marie Wilkins, founder of Wilkins Entertainment Management; Jody Adams, executive chef of Rialto; and David Wilkins, professor at Harvard Law School.
2. Nick Cobb, representative of Vineyard Road; Tiffany Taylor, wine director for Rialto; and Bart Lyrarakis, managing director of Lyrarakis Wines, Greece.
3. Kyle McEneaney, graduate student in Middle Eastern studies at Harvard University; Elysa Dunster, area director, and Joseph Saucier, sales associate, both for Escada.

Drive-By Looking

I saw you Thursday, March 22, around 5 pm. You were walking with a girlfriend or a coworker. You're around 5'3", cute, with blonde hair. I was the guy driving a grey Chevy Impala. I let you cross the street, and then I said hello and gave my horn a toot. If you see this, I'd like to say hello and perhaps ask you to join me for a drink at the Red Hat, or maybe even Quincy Market.

Sorry we got separated on the impromptu pub crawl. I hope you found your brother. It was nice meeting you, Mark. I hope the next part of your night went well!

Smell Ya Later

To the mad farter at the Dropkick Murphys show at Agganis Arena, Section 114: Whatever combination of corned beef, cabbage and Guinness you had the night before, don't have it again. Hey, it's not like we're unsympathetic; gas happens. If one slips by in public, it's an accident. Two, oh boy, is that embarrassing. But three or more, you're just a pig. You could have been a gentleman and gone to the men's room to squeeze them out in a confined area clearly marked for toxic emissions. But instead, you just kept ripping them at the people directly behind you in rows M, N and O (I couldn't tell if subsequent rows got it as badly as we did, but I wouldn't be surprised). During every other song we had to cover our faces with our shirts because you were too rude to handle your gas problem elsewhere. Even the guy directly in back of you was ready to call George W. Bush and tell him he'd discovered the location of those weapons of mass destruction. Please, next time, be a decent gent and go to the can to cut loose, okay? We still can't figure out how such a stinker had such a cute date for the concert. Maybe she lost her sense of smell in a tragic accident?

Don't Be Fooled by a Heart That's Cruel

Attention ladies: That great guy you're dating—you know, the tall, handsome, funny one who treats you to dinner and says all the right things—he's as steady as your stilettos on the Faneuil Hall cobblestones. Within a short period of time, he suddenly stops calling or he claims to be "really busy this week." Then, to your surprise, you discover he is courting another lucky lady without letting you in on the secret. With that being said, we have a message for the boys of Boston: In our quest to find decent, smart and attractive men in this glorious city, it has come to our attention that many of you fellas practice the art of "serial dating." You should know that your charm and interest fade as quickly as your class when you disappear or find another gal to fall for your tricks (while you're still seeing us). As we spend weeks assessing you—then accepting your quirks—you're looking around the bar for the next victim. So, a hot tip for current and aspiring serial daters: The jig is up. These two girls are onto you, and we're spreading the word. Special thanks go to the boys in the North End and Brighton for helping us make this realization. You know who you are.

—A Little Bit Bitter, but Much Wiser

Stand-By and Deliver

After I made the mistake of going to downtown Houston with two friends for the night—a trip that ended with a dead phone, a stolen wallet and a half-hour ride home in a police car—I was deserted in an unknown place. Needless to say, it didn't help that I only got an hour and a half of sleep before going to the airport to wait on stand-by, in order to get home a day earlier than our scheduled flight. Exhausted and just wanting to get back to Boston, my missing wallet (read: no cash) only added to my misery. When my friends made it onto the 4 pm flight, leaving me stranded alone with no assigned flight until Monday, you nice people "adopted" me. Thank you for taking me out to dinner and drinks and giving me a ride home once we arrived in Boston. Your offer to pay for a hotel room if I didn't get a seat on that flight was unbelievably nice; I just couldn't be more grateful that I met you two. It seems to be hard to find truly nice and understanding people in this world.

—Forever Grateful

Where Have All the Cowboys Gone?

On spring break, I met a boy from Texas who was interested in me for more than sex. Imagine that. He wanted to talk to me and get to know me, even before we made out. When we were on the beach at night, he offered me his shirt because I was cold. When my friend needed a ride home after we left the bar, he dropped her off even though it was out of his way. When I fell asleep, he covered me with a blanket. He bought me a drink without my asking, and he even went out of his way to see me. He was a true gentleman—a highly uncommon breed in Boston. You boys here have it too easy, using girls and degrading them as replaceable objects. I promise you that we'd actually appreciate a good guy. Going down there reassured me that not every guy is a jerk, but around this city, it can be pretty hard to see that. Step it up, Boston.

—Heading South

O Mother Nature, Where Art Thou?

We had spring, summer, fall and winter—all in a seven-day period! New England weather is so bipolar, it's scary. One day I'm in shorts; the next, I'm bundled in extra layers and earmuffs. Even the newscasters can't get it right. I guess this global warming thing is catching up with us, and the only thing we can do is wear earmuffs and shorts, just in case. Anyone agree?

rockie horoscope

APRIL 4 – 17, 2007

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

There might be a holier-than-thou vibe to Holy Week this year because, as of Good Friday, your Mars ruler will be in Pisces, the sign of the Fish. Don't dismiss the urge to sacrifice something precious for a higher purpose. And don't worry that this desire will become permanent; on May 15, Mars comes home to Aries and assumes its usual headstrong stance. Meanwhile, be sure to take advantage of the goodies headed your way as the sun in Aries favors, and is in return favored by, prosperous Jupiter and constructive Saturn.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

You simply have to be your own seriously attractive, semisweet self—not a problem while Venus, your lovable ruling planet, remains in your sign. What might be more difficult is to let the people who are prominent in your life at the moment do their thing. This includes the wise-ass associate, a philanthropic advisor and either dear old dad or the momma you occasionally would like to throw from a train. They, or folks like them, are the chief characters in the rewarding grand fire trine taking place this month.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

Like your Taurus neighbor, you may have to step away from center stage and give the supporting players in your current drama their turn in the spotlight. With know-it-all Jupiter in your Sag marriage house, your partners will insist on having their say, but a neighbor or elderly relative could also advance the plotline. We won't even mention your boss or a business associate who's demanding more attention. Your willingness to settle for less than prime time ends when your Mercury ruler leaves pious Pisces on April 10.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

For a change, the Libra full moon on April 2 wasn't an eclipse, so the Moon Child hopefully will be able to deal with your domestic scene without interruption or interference. Pay attention instead to the high-spirited and highly effective grand fire trine between the Aries sun in your career midheaven, expansive Jupiter in your work zone and stabilizing Saturn in your house of money matters. This is about as adventurous (yet constructive) a combination of planetary forces as you've encountered in many years.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

If you're not already sitting on top of the world, you should be planning your ascent. While your sun ruler is in Aries, the courageous fire sign governing your house of foreign travel, you're psyched to have a memorable physical or spiritual adventure. Add a heavy dose of enthusiasm from Jupiter in your house of recreation and risk, and you might be willing to ignore the warning signs you're getting from prudent Saturn in Leo. A grand fire trine composed of the major planets suggests that you're about to receive a huge reward. What for?

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

So much for arguing with the dry cleaners. Once assertive Mars enters Pisces on April 6, you'll prefer to fight with your partners—and they in turn with you. This much passion could lead to a more interesting sex life than you've experienced since the last time the planet of testosterone was in your house of significant others, two years ago. This interlude lasts only until mid-May, so don't be shy. Because your Mercury ruler ends its sojourn in Pisces on April 10, initiate meaningful discussions with your allies ASAP.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

That sense of emotional fulfillment that flows from a Libra full moon might not be felt, because your Venus ruler has to simultaneously deal with a challenging square from Saturn, the planet of limitations and loss. Keep your wallet close and your credit card receipts closer. Also double-check the advice you're getting from Neptunian-type dreamers and schemers. While they may be spot-on regarding aesthetic values and artistic technique, for the time being you're liable to believe any sweet nothing whispered in your ear.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

Cashing in? Lucky Jupiter in your Sag house of assets and values is poised to produce a major reward for work well-done. Plus, since Saturn in your Leo midheaven is involved, a person of stature in your chosen field seems to like you well enough to put some money where his mouth is. Adding to the possible potential for profit, the Aries sun is currently illuminating your house of coworkers and worthy causes. Put these three major forces together, and there's a better-than-average chance your trifecta ticket will pay off.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

It can't be said often enough: Your growth-oriented Jupiter ruler will continue to offer a cornucopia of benefits while it transits Sagittarius this year. Add a favorable connection to persistent Saturn in Leo, the sign of show biz, and you could be in clover far longer than anyone anticipates. An extra advantage for Holy Week: The adventurous Aries sun in your house of recreation, romance and risk forms the third leg of the rewarding grand fire trine. Savor your not-so-cockeyed optimism and bona fide good luck.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

If you can overcome the feeling that while Venus is testing your Saturn ruler your love life sucks, you'll come out of this week a far better (and much luckier) Goat. But first you have to trust that protective Jupiter is acting as your guardian angel, and that the independent Aries sun, rather than irritating you with its devil-may-care approach, is actually lightening your load at home. You may also figure out a creative solution to an ongoing financial matter during this rare, but oh-so-rewarding, grand fire sign trine.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

Fascination or fraudulence? Only because impressionable Neptune in your sign is currently the object of Venus' many charms are you being cautioned. If the goddess is simply offering decorating advice, that's all well and good. But if she's demanding that you spend way too much money, then you'd better wait another week until her influence is on the wane. Since this is a good time for partnership matters, concentrate instead on keeping those lines of communication open and aboveboard so that significant progress can be made.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

If you're aware that Jupiter (your ancient ruling planet) is turning retrograde in your career midheaven on April 5, you won't be as disappointed if what you expect to happen doesn't. Nevertheless, strong, favorable vibes are flowing from the jolly giant at the top to consistently constructive Saturn in your workaday world and the Aries sun in your money house. Might they constitute a golden parachute? Further clarification once Mercury finally leaves Pisces, where it's been hanging out since Groundhog Day.

SOOTHING SAVAGE BREASTS...

If music be the food of love, guests were doubly stuffed at the New England Conservatory's Feast of Music, held in the ballroom of the Copley Plaza.

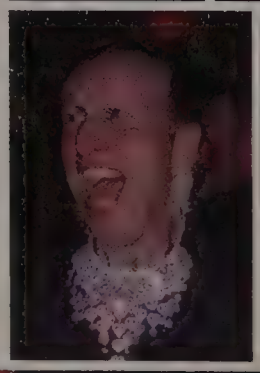
After cocktails and hors d'oeuvres, everyone was ushered into dinner with a trumpet fanfare. The six-course feast that followed was interspersed with musical interludes that offered a glimpse of what it must've been like to be the czar of Russia or European royalty—enjoying a sumptuous meal while being serenaded in a baroque ballroom filled to the rafters with drop-dead gorgeous flowers and equally drop-dead gorgeous women in stunning gowns and dazzling jewels.

Prominent among the throng were such music lovers and movers and shakers as beautiful blonde cochair Suki de Braganca and her charming other half, Miguel, the soignée Barbara Jordan, irrepressibly peppy prepster Michael Halperson, fashion plate Katie Schuller-Bleakie, ubiquitous Back Bay party pair Courtney and Michael Forrester, the charming Tadd Gillespie and his wife, Elizabeth Padjen, silver fox Pamela Humphrey and the ever-affable John, art-supplies magnate Lionel Spiro and the stunning Vivian, ex-senatorial spouse Joan Kennedy, and über-philanthropists Wendy Shattuck and Sam Plimpton, to name a few.

The evening's most amusing remark came from a woman who responded to the comment, "This is the best party of the year," with, "It's also one of those evenings that makes you wonder what you did wrong as a parent; these kids are so goddam talented."

WELL, AT LEAST YOU CAN'T GET PREGNANT...

How many gay men does it take to screw in a lightbulb?



We're not exactly sure, but if you want to know how many gay men can simulate screwing on the stage at Villa Victoria, the place to find out was the Theater Offensive's annual fundraiser, ClimActs!

Part disco-cha-cha, part drag show and part cattle call for underwear models, the evening attracted the likes of the organization's founding force of nature, Abe Rybeck, Cambridge doyenne Joan Parker and her mystery-scribbling husband Robert B., tie designer Tony Corey and the absurdly handsome C.J. Menard, smokingly hot restaurateur Gary Sullivan, Colombian go-go boy Ricardo Rodriguez and his equally hunky husband Michael Kelley, Community Servings honcho David Waters, Boston's fairy godfather Harry Collings, Cambridge's beloved Bacchus Don Sturdy, numerous men either dressed as women or undressed down to their skivvies, and even a lesbian or two, all of them having a wild time.

Disco diva Martha Wash performed, and when she sang her hit "It's Raining Men," one male guest said, "She's not kidding. I wish I had an umbrella to protect myself from all the guys dry-humping me on the dance floor."

IT'S AN HONOR JUST TO BE INVITED...

The most tedious 12 hours of television this side of the Super Bowl provided the Ellie Fund with the perfect excuse to throw a blow-out of Hollywood proportions when it hosted its annual Oscar Night America party at the State Room.

As a welcome distraction from the unutterably boring broadcast, there was free-flowing booze and copious quantities of food, as well as numerous amusing people to schmooze with, among them: car czar Ernie Boch Jr., nightlife impresario Seth Greenberg, the Channel 5 tag-team of Susan Wornick and David Brown, übersmoothie Jim Apteker, the startlingly beautiful Leslie Gleser and her handsome other half, Alex, lunachick chanteuse Jeannie Flynn with superbabe Andrea Baptiste (who really isn't the biggest loser; she just played one on TV), and countless equally sparkly others.

"I'd rather look out the window than watch the Oscars," said one guest. "The view is amazing."

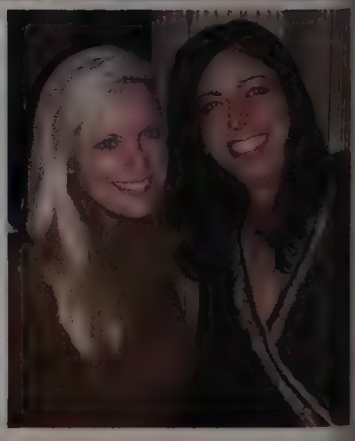
"You know what else is amazing?" said a friend. "The fact that we got all dressed up to watch TV."

THE FUNDRAISER'S NOT OVER TILL THE SKINNY LADY EATS OYSTERS...

It's hard to say what was more beautiful, the setting or the singing, when the Boston Lyric Opera hosted a masquerade party in the magnificent Back Bay home of arts boosters Jane Roy and Ellen Roy Herzfelder.

The evening attracted the likes of white-hot interior designer Duncan Hughes, superstar photographer Cheryl Richards, arctic blonde art dealer Anja Kola, yoga goddess Bethany Cantin, the scintillating Tricia Casale with the delightful Rose Ng, and board chair Steve Akin with the perfectly lovely Jane.

In a gorgeous formal music room, where the likes of Paderewski, Maria Callas and Yo-Yo Ma have performed, a pair of tenors sang arias from the upcoming season, although for some guests, the interest lay in the dining room, where a mouthwatering selection of food was arrayed.



"There's a raw bar in there," whispered one guest, to which his date responded, "I know. I already sharpened my elbows. There are no friends at a raw bar." IB

FROM THE EDITOR

THE MAIN EVENT

In our bridal issue a couple of years ago, we ran a story on etiquette for wedding guests. (We felt sorry for all those brides coping with snafus like drunk-as-a-skunk groomsmen and uninvited tagalongs.) But good manners aren't just for guests, and—on behalf of all of us who'll attend weddings this summer—we turn our attention this year to sensitivity training for engaged couples. "Etiquette for the Blissfully Happy" looks at simple things couples can do to ensure their friends have a great time at the big event.

For brides, the dress is of course one of the most important decisions, and fashion editor Victor Vargas offers five of the loveliest looks around this year, with jewelry to match, while Marni Katz susses out some pretty-as-a-picture and practical accessories, like shoes you can actually dance in.

FAB FASHIONS

Not being a sports fan, I reluctantly decided to browse through the April 4 issue of the IMPROPER, expecting to find the usual coverage of what's "happening" in Boston. To my surprise, I found one of the most stunning fashion layouts ("Party Grrrl") ever in a Boston publication. The subject matter, styling and photography were absolutely top-notch. As a textile artist, designer and world traveler living and working in the Boston area, it's rare for me to be inspired by a local publication. Keep up the fabulous work; I'm sure you can help take the image of Boston as a hip and visually exciting place to a new level.

WE ARE THE CHAMPIONS, MY FRIENDS

In response to Rich Levine's recent column, "Bumpy Road Ahead" (April 4), about the Patriots' chances in the 2007 season: Every team in the NFL has flaws, but the real contenders find ways to win despite those flaws. For a team that was one third-and-four conversion away from clocking out Indy on the road (Chicago would've been no contest), a deep playoff run is basically expected this coming season. I think they've worked to address their needs, and with Pioli, Belichick, Brady and a solid mix of youth and veterans, this team should be very good for years to come.

CONTRIBUTORS

RHONDA MULDER

While teaching a career-studies course to high schoolers, Rhonda Mulder had her own career epiphany: She realized she was better-suited to work as a commercial artist. So she went back to school in Ontario and launched a new career as a freelance illustrator. Mulder's work has appeared in Billboard, More magazine, Fast Company and McClean's, among others. Her first illustrations for the IMPROPER begin on page 34.

SAM WALTERS

Freelance writer Sam Walters grew up in Cambridge and now lives in Brooklyn, N.Y. A regular contributor to the IMPROPER and the New York, Philadelphia and Boston editions of the Metro, he attended Columbia College in Chicago, a prestigious institution with remedial reading and math programs. He's also a singer in the metal band King Hell. His latest story for the IMPROPER, "A Commitment-phobe's Tips for Getting Hitched," begins on page 34.

THE WORD

Fettuccine, al Fresco

The South End's starving artists will soon find themselves in need of a new cliché. With the opening this month of an Italian eatery at 500 Harrison, hunger pangs should cease and desist once and for all. Brought to you by the Sapphire Group's Michela Larson, Gary Sullivan and Karen Haskell—the folks behind Blu and Noir (and the original Rialto)—Rocca represents a key moment in SoWa's transformation from urban squalor into the foodie haven condo brokers have been cooing about for years. As in, it's an actual restaurant. With food. Finally. Maybe those glossy brochures were onto something after all.

Rocca's proprietors collaborated with chef Tom Fosnot (formerly executive chef at Blu) to build a menu based on the food of Liguria, the hilly, coastal region in northern Italy that includes the Italian Riviera. Why Liguria? "I realized that [its cuisine] was underrepresented in this city," says Larson. "Also, that's where my mother was born." Then again, Ligurian grub is hardly a tough sell, centered on the likes of olives, pesto, wild mushrooms, seafood and "herbs, herbs, herbs," she says. Small plates, called "Tastes," include artichokes with garlic mayonnaise ($6), wild-mushroom toasts with pecorino ($5) and fritti di pesce ($6), a tasty, deep-fried snack that transcends its all-too-mundane description as "fish sticks with salsa verde." Underpromise and overdeliver, indeed.

Slightly larger, appetizers continue the theme of simple, honest ingredients combined for maximum impact, including veal-stuffed zucchini with tomato sauce ($7) and marinated Maine sardines with radishes and mint ($9). Cash-strapped artists should check out the spaghetti "poveri" (translation: "peasant," or "poor"), pasta tossed with tomato, lemon, pine nuts and green herbs ($10). Other noodle choices include linguine levanto ($16), with rock shrimp, ricotta and spring onion, and hand-rolled trofie ($10) tossed with pesto, made with a traditional mortar and pestle. Entrées top out at $24 and include burrida ($19), a Ligurian fish stew served over toasted ciabatta, and grilled hanger steak with olive butter, roasted fingerling potatoes and grilled spring onion ($24). For dessert, a house specialty is the warm, sweetened focaccia with a candied lemon ($7). The 80-bottle wine list, almost exclusively Italian, and a full bar provide ample options for washing it all down.

Housed in a former factory, Rocca retains the quirky character of the original space, but a gut renovation has yielded a pristine décor that riffs on the theme of "mountains meeting the sea," with blues, browns and greys in flowing patterns, exposed brick and multiple levels joined by stairs that conjure Liguria's craggy landscape. The main room seats about 120, with another 40 spots at the huge, horseshoe-shaped bar. But the real draw, as the weather turns, may be the patio—a cluster of tables topped with yellow umbrellas, another coastal-Italian touch. Rocca Kitchen & Bar, 500 Harrison Ave., Boston (617-451-5151). —Jolyon Helterman

American Haidle

Playwright Noah Haidle, 28, first impressed Boston's drama set last summer with a reading from his latest work, Persephone, at the Huntington Theatre's Breaking Ground Festival. He's back and showing the play in its entirety (through May 6 at the Boston Center for the Arts). We caught up with the rising star between performances.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: So how'd you come up with the idea for Persephone*? A talking statue isn't exactly the norm.*

Noah Haidle: I was sitting in Bryant Park in New York and saw this Goethe bust that looks over the carousel, and I was thinking, "That guy would be so f---ing pissed if he could talk, watching kids go up and down on ponies for hundreds of years." It just stemmed from there.

IB: The pigeon massacre in Central Park is a pretty intense scene. Do you have a deep hatred for birds or something?

NH: No, not me. It isn't about me. But I think a statue would not like pigeons that much, so what do you do with that? You take a rifle and shoot them.

IB: We hear you never take a day off from writing. Are you all about mastering the craft?

NH: I don't really think you can master writing. It's just something I feel inspired to do every day. There aren't many writers who get better and better with their writing, and many should stop writing way before they do. I just hope I'll know when I'm ready and walk away. It's been five years.

IB: Do you still use a manual typewriter like you did at the start of your career?

NH: I do. It started like an affectation, like a bow tie, but now I prefer it.

IB: Do you have an all-time favorite play?

NH: I wish I had written Endgame by Samuel Beckett. I think it's the most perfect play ever written.

IB: You have quite a résumé yourself now as a playwright. What's your favorite work?

NH: Oh, they're all a different kind of failure, I guess—never as good as you hope and never as bad as you think. But they are different to me. Some make me laugh; some are more personal. I couldn't pick one. It's like getting a mix tape from someone. Each one reminds me of a certain time in my life and what I was feeling then.

TASTY TIDBITS

Food That Doesn't Fall Flat

Tapas This... Sports, shmortz. Now that the Bruins and the Celtics have finally (and thankfully) finished their seasons, there's a new reason to head to the Garden's 'hood: Merrimac Street's Bulfinch Hotel opened Flat Iron Tapas Bar and Lounge last month. The 45-seat spot—named for its resemblance to the Flat Iron Building in Manhattan—offers a selection of small plates, like braised short ribs ($10), pork belly confit ($10) and tuna skewers ($9), as well as creative $10 cocktails like the Mata Hari (cognac, chai-infused vermouth and pama). 119 Merrimac St., Boston (617-778-2900). www.bulfinchhotel.com.

Chang's Is in the Air... Last October, we brought you word of P.F. Chang's plans to take over the supersized Prudential Center spot that formerly housed Marché. Six months later, the lettuce wraps have arrived, as the Chinese food chain officially opened its second Boston location April 17. The nearly 10,000-square-foot space covers two floors and features an outdoor dining area. Prudential Center, Boston (617-378-9961). www.pfchangs.com.

Flambée Free-for-All... While Massachusetts blue laws might prohibit Bostonians from getting drunk on the cheap after work (damn you, founding fathers!), there's no edict against pigging out gratis. On that note, we direct you to a new happy-hour deal at Brasserie Jo. Every day from 5 pm to 12 am, the restaurant is offering barflies free personal-sized, Alsace-style pizzas with their cocktails. Can you say "tarte flambée"? The Colonnade Hotel, 120 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-425-3240).

Uni's sake bomb

It's the Bomb... In an ideal world, every sushi meal would include a tall sake bomb. But when eating at a high-end joint, we wouldn't typically have the nerve to order one—unless, of course, it were encouraged. Enter Uni's new Sake Bomb Sundays. Each week, chef Ken Oringer and chef de cuisine Chris Chung whip up a different four-course, prix-fixe meal from the sashimi bar, and when dinner's done, the bombs drop—all for the affordable price of $40 a person. 370A Comm. Ave., Boston (617-536-7200). www.cliorestaurant.com.

Yes, Soup for Us... Although the phrase "No soup for you!" entered the pop culture lexicon close to 10 years ago, the soup that inspired the Seinfeld moment remains as slurp-worthy as ever, and now it's available in Boston. The city's first Original SoupMan shop is slated to open mid-April in the Longwood Galleria, offering the same signature blends the Soup Nazi himself has served in Manhattan since 1984. 350 Brookline Ave., Boston (877-768-7626). www.originalsoupman.com.

FASH FLASH

House of Style

You've done Newbury to death. And while Charles Street has its treasures, you crave a more modern mecca. Head over to Hanover Street, where high style has sprung. Casa di Stile, the North End's newest boutique, is also its sleekest. With pale wood floors, whitewashed walls, brushed stainless fixtures and glass shelving, the place is primed for urban sophisticates. Owner Lesley Carvalho, who did her time as a buyer for TJ Maxx, has homed in on the Bostonista's inclination towards easy-dressing with an edge. The stock mostly features tops, plus dresses and denim, with prices ranging from about $80 to $300. Lines include Rachel Palley, Love by YaYa, Alice and Trixie, Rory Beca and T-Bags. For jewelry, there are designs by celeb favorites Adina Reyter and Gorjana. If you need a break, perch prettily on a Missoni print, Lucite-legged Kartell chair or a grey, microsuede cylinder stool and ogle the girls gliding down the runways at the Fashion Week shows, which play continuously on three flat-screen TVs—unless it's the weekend, in which case you can catch a screening of The Devil Wears Prada or Project Runway. Eat your heart out, Heidi. Casa di Stile, 371 Hanover St., Boston (857-233-4885). www.casadistile.com. —Marni Elyse Katz

IMPROPER REPORTS

Sole Survivor

Thousands of athletes will pound the pavement during the 111th Boston Marathon April 16. Runner or not, now's the time to treat your feet to one of these specialty services. Go on, they'll thank you later. And sandal season's just around the corner.

Bella Santé
38 Newbury St., Boston (617-424-9930). www.bellasante.com.
The week of Marathon Monday, Bella Santé offers a 40-minute Sweet Lime Ginger Reflexology Foot Massage that focuses on pressure points in the feet. The $50 treatment incorporates Hawaiian massage oil and an optional hand rub—in case you crawled those last few miles.

Emerge Spa & Salon
275 Newbury St., Boston (617-437-0006).
www.emergespasalon.com.
Created with runners in mind, the $80 Moor Mud Pedicure is an indulgent 90-minute treatment meant to stimulate circulation and soothe tired, swollen feet and calves. Purifying Moor Mud, warm thermal blankets and an oil massage contribute to feelings of pure (pedestrian) contentment.

Equilibrium
50 Congress St., Boston (617-228-5135). www.theeq.com.
Heartbreak Hill leave your lower half feeling heavy and sore? Check out the Leg and Foot Revive for $55 at Equilibrium. Also aimed at increased circulation, this massage therapy applies menthol-infused herbal gel to relieve fatigue, leaving a tingly and cool sensation.

g2o Spa & Salon
338 Newbury St., Boston (617-262-2220). www.g2ospasalon.com.
Spa-phobic guys take note. This is the rub for you. The $55 Sports Pedicure for Men includes an exfoliating scrub and a massage to release exercise-induced tension in the feet and lower legs.

Spa Newbury
115 Newbury St., Boston (617-262-9464). www.spanewbury.com.
Out with the old... The Glycolic Pedicure ($60) uses, you guessed it, a glycolic treatment to remove dry, dead skin. It also includes polish removal and repainting, nail shaping, buffing, cuticle maintenance, and a foot and lower-leg massage.

Spa Vroom Mobile Spa
(978-884-8957). www.spavroom.com.
Too tired to leave the couch? Invite over four fatigued friends and bring the spa—and the 60-minute Flirty Feet service ($60)—to you. The treatment includes a paraffin wrap (feet and hands), a pedicure and an extensive massage. There's a $300 minimum.

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Proper Tea... Think Boston's got tea snobs? Our transatlantic cousins aren't impressed. Hence, the recent arrival of the Whittard of Chelsea boutique on Newbury Street. The 120-year-old English company has opened several shops in the U.S., aspiring to bring a "proper" teatime to the States. With a London-trained staff, more than 60 varieties and flavors, custom-designed teacups and serving sets, this is serious business. (We're talking a blend-your-own bar and tasting room.) This time, the Brits are hosting the tea party. 170 Newbury St., Boston (617-536-5200). www.whittard.com.

Urban Living Studio

Baseball Gets Bottled... What goes better with baseball than beer? Wine! At least when it's endorsed by Red Sox players. Manny Ramirez, Curt Schilling and Tim Wakefield have all launched labels to raise money for a good cause. There's Manny Being Merlot (CHARLEE Homes for Children), Schilling Schardonnay (the ALS Association) and CaberKnuckle (Pitching in for Kids). The designated charities will receive $1.25 for every bottle sold. Find the beneficent blends at liquor stores, restaurants, hotels and Fenway Park, beginning in late May. Collectors of all things baseball, take your mark. www.charitywines.com.

Style Reborn... New owner, new look, new merchandise: Fresh Eggs has been re-hatched as Urban Living Studio. Proprietress Kristen Gaughan has transformed the South End space into what she calls a "lifestyle store" for the modern city dweller. Indeed, it feels like a chic friend's loft. Offerings include Global Weave's bedding, Blue Dot's furniture, Chilewich floor and placemats, and Angela Adams rugs; you can create your own cool vibe with the help of an on-site design center. Gaughan also sells paintings and sculpture from area artists and hopes to host local exhibitions and design workshops. 58 Clarendon St., Boston (617-247-8150). www.urbanlivingstudio.com.

Boston Rocks... L.A. scenesters may beg to differ, but some say Boston is (and always has been) America's best rock 'n' roll city. The crew at Triple B Recording Studios in Everett agrees. Their forthcoming CD The History of Boston Rock: Here and Now features 16 of Beantown's hottest bands from the past and present. You'll hear tracks by Noble Rot, the Illegals and the Mercy James Gang, among others. The CD release party is May 24 and 25 at the Basement Tavern, but you can get a preview at the studio's MySpace page. www.myspace.com/triplebrecording

Ride That Train... No matter how many times a week you're moved to hurl expletives at the T, our mass transit system is apparently doing something right: Its Web site, www.mbta.com, is up for a 2007 Webby Award in the Government category. Other finalists include the Library of Congress and political watchdog FactCheck.org. The winner will be announced in May. —LPK

ONE MEAN BEAN

In which I generally behave myself while dressed as the Boston Bean. Except for the lap dance.

I flush the toilet and walk out of the stall at the Marriott. The guy washing his hands at the sink takes one look at me and begins laughing hysterically. Under normal circumstances this would be cause for alarm, but these are not normal circumstances. This man is laughing because out of the stall has just emerged a giant baked bean.

Perhaps you've seen the Bean around town. His face looks like Mr. Hanky from South Park, but otherwise he's standard mascot fare: Comically enormous body, three fingers on each overstuffed hand, cartoonish sneakers. But, since there's no local sports team named after the magical fruit, why does he even exist?

Good question, and when I agree to become the Bean for a few hours, I don't know the answer. When I show up for my turn in the costume, I learn from the Bean's PR people that the costume is essentially a means of promoting Bean-related tchotchkes in various touristy stores, and therefore my donning the outfit amounts to little more than a marketing ploy. Essentially, I'm a Bean whore. But if that's what it takes to anonymously molest my wife in her workplace while dressed as a giant bean, then so be it. More on that in a moment.

Of course, I take a spin around Faneuil Hall to get warmed up. The reaction to the Bean is overwhelmingly positive. I get mobbed outside the Faneuil Hall Marketplace as a crowd gathers to take photos with me. All this attention makes me feel good until I remind myself that nobody wants a photo with Ezra, they want a photo with a permanently smiling anthropomorphic vegetable. And honestly, who wouldn't?

Since my vision is worse than Stuart Scott's, my primary goal throughout the photo ops is simply to avoid falling down a set of stairs or toppling into the harbor. Also, to avoid going all Incredible Hulk on children who think it's funny to pound on the Bean's head. Believe me, there are several youngsters in the Boston area who nearly provoked an incident that would've caused Bean-related nightmares for years to come.

After checking out lingerie at Victoria's Secret and bellying up to the bar at the Times, I'm ready for the main event. My wife, Heather, works in the Financial District, so I plod over to her building and take the elevator up to her office. I've tipped off one of her coworkers, but for the most part, people look mystified as the Bean walks past them.

I stop at Heather's desk and begin doing the goofy mascot routine—waving, pretending to steal her day planner, soliciting high-fives. But the Bean isn't here just to hand out key chains and act in a hilarious manner. The Bean is here to get freaky.

I begin by "accidentally" brushing my hand against Heather's chest. "Hey Bean, careful there," she says. I put my hand in front of my mouth (or at least, the area where I assume the Bean's mouth is) to convey, "Oops, innocent mistake." Next, I climb onto her knee and begin giving her the world's most awkward lap dance. One of Heather's coworkers looks ready to take me down. "Uh, OK, Bean, take it easy," Heather says, but that's the extent of her reprimand.

Overall, she's surprisingly relaxed about having a walking legume molest her at work. It's as if this isn't even that abnormal. Maybe, while some companies have casual Fridays, Heather's has "inappropriate mascot Fridays." I'll bet last week Pat the Patriot was in here pole-dancing.

I HEAR HEATHER SAY TO HER COWORKER, "I THINK THE BEAN MADE ME PREGNANT."

I dismount and quickly give her the "tune in Tokyo" move before running back down the hallway, much to the relief of Heather, her coworkers and likely the Bean handlers, who are probably starting to wonder how a Bean would defend himself against a sexual harassment lawsuit. As I leave, I hear Heather say, "I think the Bean made me pregnant."

I can't resist revealing my identity, so I walk back to her desk and pull off my left glove to reveal my wedding ring. A flood of recognition washes over her face. "What the hell is wrong with you?!" she says. She's laughing, but that's certainly a fair question, given the circumstances.

I think the answer to that question is best summarized by a four-year-old girl in Faneuil Hall. She approaches me for a photo at the behest of her parents, but she's not psyched about the situation. She takes in my ridiculous outfit and utters a sentiment to which Heather would probably 100 percent agree: "Beans are weird." IB

THE COLLINS CARD

BY CHRIS COLLINS

A SCHILLING FOR MY THOUGHTS

In a contract year, can Curt's body back his mouth's promises?

New season, new expectations. Bostonians can't help but hope for the best. They could hardly wait for the 2007 opener, telling me as much as soon as spring training ended.

This year, there's good reason for the excitement. The Red Sox are a legitimate contender to win their second world championship since 1918. Surprising? Absolutely not. They should be at the top of the heap, sporting the second-highest payroll in baseball, which will be in the ballpark of $160 million when all of the clauses and bonuses are paid out.

It makes things a little bit easier having boatloads of cash at their disposal, but despite the money there are enough flaws to stop them from reaching the promised land. You want to know who I think the key is—the guy who's more crucial than we think, simply because we take his performance for granted? Curt Schilling.

I saw "Schill," as manager Terry Francona likes to call him, wearing one of those T-shirts from the 2004 season: "Why not us!" it declared. On closer inspection, though, I saw that this was a new version. It had an extra word in the motto: "Why not us… again!" If "again" is to be part of the Red Sox vocabulary this fall, Schilling's spot in the rotation is where it's likely to start.

His pathetic public attempt to muscle the Sox brass into giving him a contract extension is the latest example of Curt being Curt. Theo Epstein had it right when he said it wouldn't be prudent to give the 40-year-old pitcher an extension worth more than $10 million (he wants $13 million) if there's a decent possibility that Schilling's body could break down. And given his physical condition when camp opened in February, that idea's not so far-fetched.

In fact, all I could think of when Schilling arrived at camp looking fat (and looking for a phat new deal) was Christopher from The Sopranos uttering, "Where did you get your balls?"

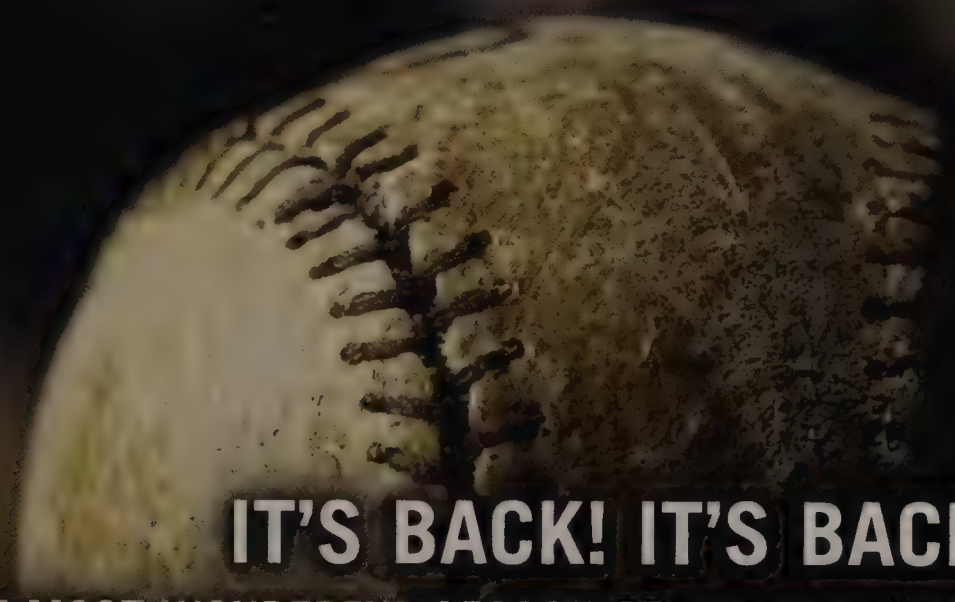
In the real world, when you're gunning for more money, it's in your best interest not to show up looking like someone who should be watching the game from the Budweiser Pavilion.

Schilling couldn't buy a headline this spring down in Fort Myers. Even on the day he was supposed to get top billing after his contractual dispute, the news was dominated by the tragic death of Dennis Johnson (God rest his soul).

So earlier this month, Schilling got his wish again. He was the Man, given the ball for the opener. It was the Kansas City Royals. Like most folks, I was already thinking about the next game.

But Schilling still looked like he'd eaten all the meatballs he ended up serving that day. We've seen worse performances, but the fact that it was Schilling, who really needed to get off to a good start… well, that concerned me. He'd been calling himself an ace for the past couple of weeks in Florida, and I believed him.

I'm going to give him a pass on the opener, and even the next couple of starts in April. He's done too much to be judged so early. But he does concern me. With Jonathan Papelbon going back to the closer role, Schilling needs to anchor the starting lineup more than ever.



WHEN YOU'RE GUNNING FOR MORE MONEY, IT'S IN YOUR BEST INTEREST NOT TO SHOW UP LOOKING LIKE SOMEONE WHO SHOULD BE WATCHING THE GAME FROM THE BUDWEISER PAVILION

Behind him are two good pitchers, but neither Daisuke Matsuzaka nor Josh Beckett is a sure thing. I have to admit, Dice-K looks good. Someone in the know told me as I watched him pitch this spring that I was seeing the Red Sox' ace—and my team source isn't alone in that sentiment. Matsuzaka's also the only guy who can rival Big Papi's entourage of media and followers. So this could well be the year the keys to the ace's locker get passed.

But what I really want to see is Schilling pitch at the top of his game. The Red Sox are good if he's good, and they're great if he's great. Here's hoping his arm can continue to keep up with his mouth. IB

Soroff ON

DAVID MCCULLOUGH

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Two-time Pulitzer Prize–winning biographer and historian David McCullough was born in Pittsburgh and graduated with honors in English literature from Yale. He has been an editor, essayist, teacher, lecturer and (with his instantly recognizable, stentorian voice) a PBS television personality, hosting Smithsonian World, The American Experience and Ken Burns' documentary The Civil War. On film, he provided the narrator's voice in Seabiscuit. He has twice won the National Book Award and in 2006 received the country's top civilian honor, the Presidential Medal of Freedom. His books include The Johnstown Flood, The Great Bridge, The Path Between the Seas, Mornings on Horseback, Truman and John Adams. His most recent work, 1776, reached No. 1 on the New York Times bestseller list, and none of his books has ever been out of print (a rare feat in publishing). A former trustee of the Boston Public Library, he's the namesake of the David McCullough Fund for the conservation of the library's special collections, founded by the Associates of the Boston Public Library, which will hold its annual fundraiser, Literary Lights, on April 29. McCullough lives on Martha's Vineyard with his wife, Rosalee, with whom he has five children and 18 grandchildren.

Jonathan Soroff: First of all, is your library card up-to-date?

David McCullough: [Laughs.] Probably not. I don't know that I've ever taken a book out. I'm not a borrower. I've always gone there to use the special collections, be they rare books or the newspaper files.

JS: What one thing should all Bostonians know about the Boston Public Library?

DM: That it's one of the five greatest libraries in America, along with the Library of Congress, the Widener Library at Harvard, the Sterling Memorial Library (which includes the Beinecke) at Yale and the New York Public Library. But the Boston Public Library is the only one that's a true public library, because the New York Public Library is technically a private institution that's open to the public. The Boston Public Library is also the first municipal building designed specifically for that purpose, and it's one of the greatest buildings in the country. I believe the reading room, besides being one of the most spectacular spaces anywhere, has the largest barrel-vaulted ceiling in the country.

JS: What's a library's role in a democracy?

DM: Without a doubt, public libraries are one of the greatest of American institutions, and if you've ever worked or lived abroad you'll know this. Free access to literature, history, philosophy, mathematics, the works—civilization's entire treasure house of ideas—is open to everyone. It's pure democracy at work. The portals of a great library are the portals to freedom.

JS: That's a pretty major statement.

DM: Well, Thomas Jefferson said, "Any nation that expects to be ignorant and free expects what never was and never will be." There's no excuse to be ignorant in a community where there's a public library, and there's one in virtually every community in the land. I like to tell people that if you get down about the state of education, learning, the arts, etc., in our country today, remember that there are still more public libraries in America than there are McDonalds.

"THERE'S NO EXCUSE TO BE IGNORANT IN A COMMUNITY WHERE THERE'S A PUBLIC LIBRARY."

JS: Three favorite things in the BPL's special collections?

DM: By far, the Adams collection. It's one of the major, great national treasures: 3,510 books that belonged to a man who never had much money and were purchased by him at a time when books were extremely expensive. But beyond that, I'm particularly indebted to the great newspaper collection there. And I absolutely adore the John Singer Sargent murals. The BPL is one of the great art museums, as well.

JS: What will happen to the special collections if they're not conserved?

DM: They'll rapidly deteriorate to the point of being useless and worthless. Deferred maintenance is very unwise under almost any conditions. Gross deferred maintenance is grossly irresponsible, particularly when you're talking about treasures of infinite value.

JS: How much?

DM: Some of them are priceless. There's one edition of Cicero which belonged to John Adams. It was the first book he ever purchased. He was 14 years old, and he was so proud of that book, of owning it. Keep in mind that his mother was illiterate and his father—well, we know that he could write his name—but John Adams came from origins as humble as those of Abraham Lincoln. So here's this 14-year-old boy who's bought a book, and he wrote his name in it six times. And that's the earliest example we have of his handwriting. Anyway, I'm told that to conserve that book to the point where it will last another 200 or 300 years would cost about $4,000. If it's not conserved, it might last another 40 years and be gone. If it were to go on sale at auction, it could bring a million dollars. And yet it continues to decay.

JS: That's criminal.

DM: People think being a good citizen is just voting, but it's also looking after the treasures that belong to the community. And if those books were paintings by great Renaissance masters, would they be allowed to stand in the sun or be in a room where water dripped down on them? No, but because they're rare books, we pay less attention. Everything there needs conservation: There are wonderful Dürer and Daumier prints, all the Sacco and Vanzetti case papers, a huge collection of abolitionist literature, one of the world's greatest Shakespeare collections… all of that and more is there.

JS: Do you enjoy the writing more than the research?

DM: I don't really separate them. I'm often asked how much time I spend doing each, which is a perfectly good question, but nobody ever asks how much of my time I spend thinking. But I like it all and I do it all together as part of one effort. And I love my work.

JS: Is it true that history is written by the victors?

DM: Oh sure, some of it. If you think of history as primarily politics, military and social issues, I suppose it is. But I don't think of history that way. I think of it as a mix of everything. Who are the victors in the creation of a great work of art? Who are the victors in writing a great musical composition or piece of literature?

JS: How do you think this moment in time will be remembered?

DM: Well, I'm more and more interested in the way a society or a nation or a civilization expresses itself in ways other than politics or wars or social policies and traditions. We'll probably be remembered much longer for our music, our literature. Gershwin and Willa Cather and Mark Twain and Thomas Eakins will probably be remembered far more than the people we think of as "making history." I think that's almost self-evident.

JS: If you could witness one moment in history, what would it be?

DM: I'd like to see the moment when Washington was stepping down as president, Adams was about to become president and Jefferson was about to become vice president, and they were all standing on the same platform in the old Senate in Philadelphia, Independence Hall.

JS: Anything you'd change from history?

DM: Sure. Of course, Hitler should've been stopped in his tracks. I guess that would be number one.

JS: Last question: Do you hope history remembers you as the savior of the BPL's special collections?

DM: No, I don't care anything about that. If my name on this fund helps raise more money, I'm delighted. I want to see those books preserved. I want to see the people of Boston, the mayor, step up to their responsibilities. We must never, ever take our public libraries for granted. People just assume that these things are looked after properly, but they're not. I'm not blaming anyone. We're all to blame, and we must change it. IB

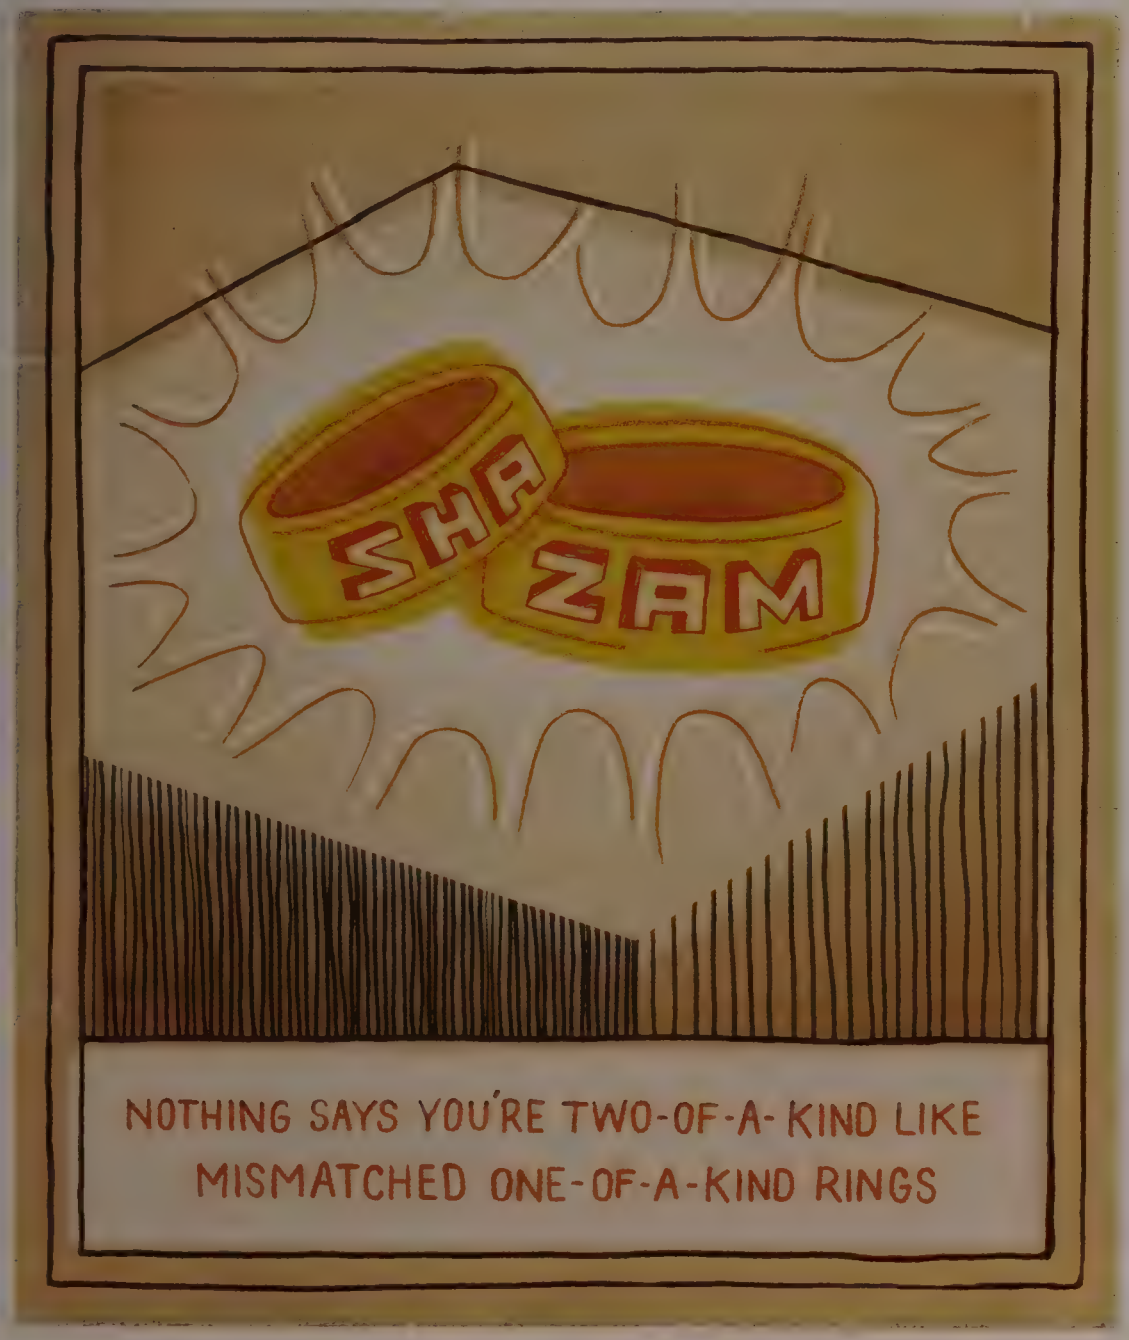
A commencement-phobe's

TIPS FOR GETTING HITCHED

Here's an insider's guide for couples who'd rather plan their wedding than their life

By Sam Walters | Illustrations by Rhonda Mulder



saying

I have commitment issues is like saying a criminal is jail-averse. In the past I couldn't even get a pet unless it was seeing other owners. However, today I'm engaged thanks to a simple, eight-step program I devised for commitment-phobes called Get Married, Not Serious. It would be base to put a price on love; I present it to you free of charge, so that you, too, may overcome your fear and marry the person of your dreams. Besides, I know you'll pay through the nose to buy my follow-up program, Staying Married, Staying Sane.

[Rule #4]

1. FIND A MIXED-SEX PARTNER.
This doesn't mean your betrothed has to be a hermaphrodite or transgender; rather, he or she should have the outward appearance of the sex you're physically attracted to, while inwardly possessing traits that you can tolerate, i.e. those of your own gender. (I'm not sure about this dynamic in gay and lesbian couples, but it's key for straight people.) Many of my friends have made the tragic mistake of marrying actual women/men, only to find that there's nothing for them to do together but suffer and watch the Red Sox—again—while their spouse makes up knowledge about the intricacies of a gyroball, or trudge the aisles of Bed, Bath & Beyond looking for place settings that match the color scheme of the curtains and sofa (something for which there are enough conflicting rules to keep you wandering the store for infinity). I made sure to avoid this trap by meeting my fiancée at live heavy-metal karaoke. She's a comely PhD student, and she knows all the words to Iron Maiden's "Number of the Beast." She was even on the boys' varsity hockey team in high school. We call each other "bro" and drink Labatt. She can also cook—a feminine attribute I'm willing to accept. All of this makes it easy for me to pretend I'm hanging with a guy, which makes our commitment much easier. (Note: While she played men's sports in high school, I was on the varsity drama team—yes, there is such a thing in Cambridge—so, conversely, it's perfectly easy for her to imagine I'm a gal pal when we go clothes shopping.) The only time my gender illusion needs adjusting is in the bedroom, when I have to explain away why my buddy has giant bazooms and noticeably absent plumbing.

2. BACK INTO YOUR ENGAGEMENT.
My fiancée and I are both afraid of marriage, and she repeatedly mentioned that she'd never want an engagement ring, so we were able to circumvent an actual marriage proposal. Our engagement unfolded thus: There was much halting talk about how "yeah, like, getting married could be cool someday, if you met the extra, extra right person." On a whim, we looked up some wedding venues online, then made appointments to view them, but only because we really liked checking out giant, empty rooms. While leaving a just-in-case $5,000 deposit at one place, we fleetingly acknowledged that "this probably means something." Finally, when we recounted our activities to a friend, he seized on the obvious and offered his congratulations, in effect engaging us. We're technically not engaged, we tell ourselves, which makes the marriage null and void whenever we're not getting along and are worried that we married a total idiot.

3. GET NONTRADITIONAL WEDDING RINGS.
I've heard accounts of commitment-phobes' knuckles swelling during marriage ceremonies in a psychosomatic attempt to keep the rings off their fingers. To stave off these reactions, I recommend rings that look like something else. We're getting ours custom-made so that we can mutate them beyond all recognition. My ring has a giant Z in the middle for no good reason; other than that it looks cool and it's probably never graced a man's wedding ring. (Even if your name is Zacharias, you're not going to get your own initial on your wedding ring. Plus the only female Z name is Zelda, and no sane man would marry a truth-seeing fortune teller.) With this makeshift lightning bolt in the middle of my ring, when I look down at it, I don't think, "I'm someone's spouse." I think, "I'm Shazam!"

4. RENOUNCE CHILDREN EARLY ON.

Whether you lose your minds somewhere down the line and elect to have children is irrelevant. (If you're getting married because you're having a child, try and find a wizard who'll take your firstborn in exchange for some magic birth control beans.) What's essential is assuring your still-single self that you'd sooner light your head on fire than invite kids into your life. Mere marriage shouldn't alter your lifestyle much, and it'll be notably free of spittle, diapers and unabated shrieking, unless you're into that sort of thing, which you'll also be freer to pursue without kids. (Try explaining that to Junior when he wanders into the bedroom.) A good way to stave off creeping parental fantasies is for you and your beloved to spend time every week brainstorming reasons why kids are a worse idea than the Iraq invasion, of which there are billions upon billions. For instance, you can't take kids bar hopping, and even if you could they wouldn't be able to hold their liquor. Who wants to deal with a tanked 6-year-old picking a fight with the biggest guy in the bar, who then comes looking for you to discuss your parenting? Kids seal their useless status by being unable to serve as designated drivers, though they will prevent you from incurring a DUI by keeping you home. However, a night in jail might just be preferable.

5. KEEP WEDDING COSTS DOWN.

Much, much easier said than done, but the less money you can imagine coughing up, the easier the decision to go ahead with a wedding will be. For instance, in an effort to keep costs down, my fiancée and I opted to go with tapas instead of a traditional catered dinner. This saved us several thousand dollars, until we decided that we couldn't have tapas without gazpacho, and we couldn't have gazpacho without sangria to wash it down. Unfortunately, watered-down tomato juice and cheap wine with oranges in it costs $50 a pitcher—ay, caramba! And, of course, our Spanish wedding—being held in a Hasidic Jewish neighborhood of Brooklyn—wouldn't be complete without a flamenco troupe. To balance those costs, we've scaled back on our honeymoon and will be spending our first week as husband and wife in Afghanistan. There's no skeet shooting like on a cruise ship, but we'll learn to fire AK-47s, and we hope to smuggle some opium back with us to defray some of the wedding debt.

[Rule #6]

6. KEEP YOUR GUEST LIST TO A MINIMUM.

Obviously, this helps reduce the wedding costs, but sharply restricting the number of people who actually witness your nuptials will also make it easier to deny that it ever happened. The best way to do this without insulting anyone is to send out as many invites as you like, but make the wedding utterly impossible to attend. This is a chance to get creative! Hold your wedding on the lip of an active volcano in Java; I have absolutely no idea where Java is, which means it must be outrageously expensive to get there, plus you have to be an expert mountaineer to get up to the ceremony. If any of your friends still promise to come, claim that according to Javan custom the wedding must run from Hanukkah through Christmas Day, which should preclude most guests from attending. For the remaining orphans and atheists, explain that the volcano will require a human sacrifice, and as they'll be the only person there aside from yourselves, you're afraid they'll have to go into the lava. So they don't think you're unusually cruel, tell them they don't have to bring a gift.

7. MAKE YOUR BACHELOR/BACHELORETTE PARTY LESS FUN THAN MARRIED LIFE.

Sure, going to a strip club with the fellas or hitting the town with your girlfriends waving a bunch of phallic props would be decadent fun, but you're going to wake up to a much more dour existence the next morning—one that doesn't allow you to deposit dollar bills anywhere but in a joint account, or wear giant, inflatable penis headdresses. (The appeal of the latter escapes me, ladies, but I suppose I have my own penis to wear around town.) Instead of setting yourself up for a disappointing life, make your last day as a single person one that makes marriage look like a blessing. I've asked my friends to take me to play paintball, where I understand custom dictates that the bachelor be the prime target. If you haven't played paintball, yes, it hurts—a lot. My last memory of single life will be of my best friends shooting me in the ass while I flee into the protecting arms of my fiancée.

[Rule #8]

8. DISGUISE YOUR WEDDING.

The problem with most weddings, for commitment-phobes, is that they're readily recognizable as such. There are the two assembled families and some sort of holy officiant; the groom likely finds himself in a tux and the bride in what would be hard to construe as anything other than a wedding dress. These sorts of details make it almost impossible for the couple to imagine they're anywhere but at their own wedding—a terrifying thought. Therefore the couple should do everything they can to make the wedding as unobvious as possible. At our wedding, we're encouraging people to wear "colorful and creative attire," the more outrageous the better. A guest arriving in a gorilla suit will go a long way toward helping us believe we're simply at a masquerade ball, and if I can persuade my grandmother to come in drag, I'm sure I can convince myself it's all a fever dream. Instead of a traditional wedding band, we've hired the same heavy-metal karaoke group we were watching when we met. If the sight of my grandmother with a handlebar moustache talking to an ape sipping a martini doesn't cause me to believe I'm somewhere else, I'm sure singing "War Pigs" in my leather tux before setting my legs on fire à la Nikki Sixx will take me far away. If even that fails, my fiancée and I plan to drop acid and visit Mars, where there is no life to remind us that ours has become lamer. IB sserts ought to taste as good as it looks

Remember when "wedding cake" meant one thing—round, white and tiered? Sure, slight variations existed: Cascading flowers exemplified good taste; statuesque columns suggested a certain grandeur; icing-on-icing embroidery showcased refined elegance. But the traditional standard reigned supreme. ■ Today's bakers are breaking the mold. Prefab patterns are jumping-off points to more offbeat designs—a life-size version of the family dog, say, or an uncanny 3D replica of Frank Lloyd Wright's Fallingwater. And as for flavor, Styrofoamy frostings are a dying breed. Plenty taste as good as they look. ■ Now that you can have your cake and (want to) eat it too, think of it like your dress; you want a dessert that fits your personality. To help with the search, we've tracked down seven Boston bakers who create confections to suit different styles and budgets. You'll be thanking us on the big day—and a year later.

PASTRY PRODIGY

Talk about a hobby turning into a career. Following cake-decorating classes, Monica Mariano switched from sales and marketing to baking and frosting. After four-plus years working in some of Boston's finest cake shops, Mariano's handiwork has earned a reputation of its own (the Caramel Blast is a showstopper).

"I pride myself on [my cakes] looking clean and simple, but polished"—a recipe, she says, built on "years of practice," quality ingredients (imported bittersweet chocolate and fresh butter, for example) and not "rushing the cakes." And it shows. Immaculately smooth buttercream edges that mimic fondant would fool even a trained eye.

Now running her own business, Dolce Cake Design, Mariano limits her workload so she can keep her business completely hands-on. "I like to be the one doing everything—the baking, the filling, the icing. I want the quality control. No matter how beautiful the cake is, the taste is what makes people really remember the quality of the work."

EDIBLE ART

When she opened Cakes to Remember in Brookline nearly 20 years ago, Ellen Bartlett assumed her product, being both beautiful and delicious, would sell. "I thought everyone would want that," she says, "but most people had grown up on bakery cakes made from Crisco frosting. I wanted to serve dessert lovers and visual-art lovers."

Bartlett was just ahead of her time. Now her cakes—works of art, really—are in such high demand that she recommends booking six months in advance. For creative brides, it's worth the wait. Case in point: An Oriental rug inspired one client's confection. Another couple incorporated their bulldog into the groom's cake. Frank Lloyd Wright fans, meanwhile, chose Fallingwater as their centerpiece—a project that took Bartlett 20 hours.

Minimalists (and those with modest bank accounts) need not be discouraged, however. The self-taught baker recently developed her 520 series: seven cakes based on "streamlined" flavors and "simpler" designs, all offered at $5.20 per person (rather than the usual $6–$15 price range).

Be Sure to Sample: Cape Cod Spice—sour cream spice cake with toasted walnut, fresh cranberry buttercream and cream cheese buttercream frosting

ONE-STOP SHOPPING

Party Favors chef-owner John Pergantis is hardly running a wedding factory out of his recently expanded Beacon Street storefront. But there's no denying that this family business, whose butter bill runs higher than the electric, covers just about all the bridal bases: ring-bearer pillows, place cards, custom invitations (discounted by 10 percent when purchased with a cake). That far reach extends to the dessert possibilities as well.

"I'm about to do a cake that completely mimics the bride's gown," Pergantis explains, pulling out a photograph and a sketch from one client's file. "You see the pleating at the bottom and top of her dress? We're going to use fondant to achieve those folds, and then we'll do that rose trim in the middle with buttercream." With a 10-person kitchen staff, he's able to offer 10 cake flavors, 22 fillings and six frostings—and those are just suggestions. "You can mix and match, or we can come up with other flavors," he says. "We're not married to anything here."

DOING WITHOUT DAIRY

Decadent buttercream knows few rivals as the premier choice for wedding-cake fillings and frostings. But if the savory portion of your kosher meal is meat-based, finding an alternative to a heavily dairy staple can be tough. Enter Andrew Wiener. "We had a need for really good cakes," explains Wiener, whose eponymous kosher catering company started as an offshoot of his family's Brookline restaurant, Café Shalom, 20 years ago.

So he hired Jessica Payne from the Charles Hotel and challenged her to convert dairy items to nondairy. Her solution? No gimmicks. Payne pairs top-quality margarine, chocolate and liqueurs with sugar and homemade simple syrups, using the substitutes sparingly and seamlessly. The results have made Catering by Andrew a household name among local, and not so local, Jewish families. Tip: Kosher cakes are also a great alternative for anyone who's lactose-intolerant.

Be Sure to Sample: Vanilla Mocha—vanilla cake with mocha filling and vanilla frosting Catering by Andrew, 402 Harvard St., Brookline (617-731-6585). www.cateringbyandrew.com. $2.50–$3.50, per slice.

ANYTHING GOES

Calling all free-spirited brides: Sweet Tooth is the shop for you. Artists-turned-bakers Glenn Quirion and David Venter have had it with corporate America. Indeed, Quirion left the rat race to open the retro-nostalgic Sweet Tooth in South Boston.

With the help of "Mom" (aka Venter's old lady), they churn out from-scratch sweets, plus a growing number of custom-order cakes. "A lot of bakeries have templates and say, 'This is what you can get,'" Venter observes. "Our expertise comes in [executing] someone else's wishes." Quirion adds, "Our goal is not to steer a bride in any direction; we're just the captains." They'll jump in only if they think flavors are ill-paired.

Dummy models and a photo album exhibit everything from triple-tiered "baskets" of tulips to a whimsical "his and hers" duo: a dainty white-chocolate cake with white orchids paired with a decadent dark-chocolate groom's cake, made richer with fake folded dollar-bills as decoration. Added bonus: Boston-area deliveries are on the house. Sweet, indeed.

CAKE-A-PALOOZA

"It's like Santa's workshop in here all the time," exclaims Rebecca Moesinger as she shuffles through the 15,000-square-foot Braintree kitchen, a gob of frosting seeping into her maroon apron. The phones ring off the hook as couples crowd around bistro tables in the tasting room, waffling over buttery slabs of tiramisu, Black Forest torte and the house signature, Strawberry Grand Marnier. It's just your typical Saturday morning at Konditor Meister (that's German for "master pastry chef"). Well, perhaps a bit atypical. "In a month," Moesinger says assuredly, "it'll be absolute mayhem in here."

Producing about 50 wedding cakes per weekend may sound ambitious, but Rebecca and her co-owner, Guenther, have been at this for some 20 years. "Everything here is made from scratch," Rebecca says. She's not kidding. Two members of her 40-strong cakeforce dip into a cavernous mixing bowl of buttercream; two more pipe out French blue, apple green and shocking pink daisies; one tends a long wall of stainless-steel deck ovens. The butter damage per week averages in the hundreds of pounds. "Anybody can make a pretty cake, but how about a pretty, delicious cake?" she asks. Here, each one gets a team.

Konditor Meister, 32 Wood Road, Braintree (781-849-1970). www.konditormeister.com. $3–$5 per slice.

FRENCH KISSED

Small-scale, by-appointment operations tend to pride themselves on personal attention—really going the distance. At Le Beau Gâteau, Brookline-based Erika Bruce, a former Rialto pastry chef and Cook's Illustrated editor, takes that philosophy to a new level. Bruce once went so far as to pack her bags—fully loaded with 40 pounds of fresh buttercream, icing spatulas and turntables—board an airplane to North Carolina and assemble a five-tiered masterpiece on-site. All that over a rainy August weekend.

Long-distance catering aside, her dedication isn't reserved for special circumstances. "My favorite part is working with clients to come up with whatever is unique to them," she says. Trained in classical French techniques, Bruce specializes in European-style genoise, sponge and chiffon cakes, with sophisticated flavors like espresso and liqueur—nice complements to substantial menus. "You eat a lot at a wedding, and sometimes an American butter cake can be a bit too rich and heavy," she says. Of course, she'll make one if you ask.

Etiquette for the blissfully happy

If you really want your guests to enjoy your big day, consider this advice. By Carmen Nobel

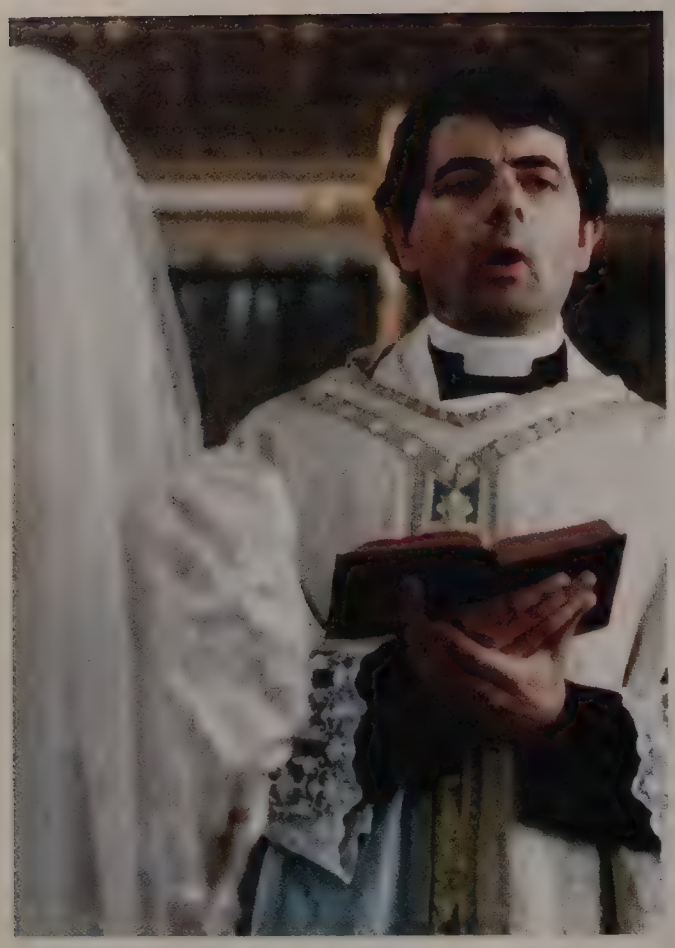
A few weeks ago an old boyfriend sent me a link to his wedding Web site. He's getting hitched in September. I knew this already; although we broke up years ago and live on opposite coasts, we keep in touch in that "let's stay friends" way. (Last year he sent a Christmas card—a happy picture of him, his fiancée and their cat, wearing red sweaters and Santa hats. I don't have a fiancé, but I have a picture of Elie Wiesel and myself from a Boston University lecture, so I sent that. "It's been quite a year for both of us!" I wrote.)

Still, the Web site message surprised me. An ex was inviting me to his wedding? I clicked on the link and found a 200-word play-by-play of the marriage proposal. The cat was involved. I clicked on the "guest information" tab, and the site asked me for my password. "Am I invited to your wedding?" I e-mailed my ex. "I don't have my password."

"Well, no, you're not on the guest list," he replied. "It was more of an FYI thing. I thought you'd be interested in the site."

A personal wedding Web site is the Internet equivalent of a vacation slide show, I told him. It's only interesting if it includes a picture of someone getting mauled by a bear. He apologized for the misunderstanding. As for his wedding, "I honestly didn't think you'd want to go," he said.

Of course he was right, and not just because no single woman in her right mind wants to attend her ex-boyfriend's wedding. The reality is that no matter how much I love the happy couple, I cringe a little at any wedding invitation. For guests—especially single guests—weddings can be financially and emotionally draining. While brides and grooms have every right to focus on themselves, they can make their big day special for their friends, too, by following a few simple rules. (We've just covered No. 1: Don't overshare your wedding Web site.)



2. DON'T TELL YOUR BRIDESMAIDS THEY'LL WEAR THE DRESS AGAIN.

When a woman signs on as a bridesmaid, she agrees to purchase and wear whatever the bride selects. This generally includes a floor-length dress and shoes dyed to match. "I've had to buy dyed shoes for every wedding I've ever been in," attests Maggie Starvish, a writer and transcriptionist from Somerville. "They're overpriced the way tampons are: You have to buy them, so stores can charge whatever they want."

Unless they're mean or really insecure, brides will try to find decent gowns. But that's not saying much. Bridesmaids invariably hate the affordable ones, which seem cheesy in a high school–prom way, and they resent the elegant ones for setting them back 400 bucks. Most women can deal with either scenario—but they seriously risk going over the edge if you tell them, "I picked you a dress that you'll definitely wear again!"

Just don't utter the phrase. Look, it's a bridesmaid dress, and it's not appropriate for anything other than your wedding. You may tell your bridesmaids what to wear on your special day, but you may not tell them what to wear on any other day. When you do, here's what I'm thinking: "No, but YOU will wear it again." If I get married, I'm going to ask my bridesmaids to wear the dresses that I wore in their weddings.

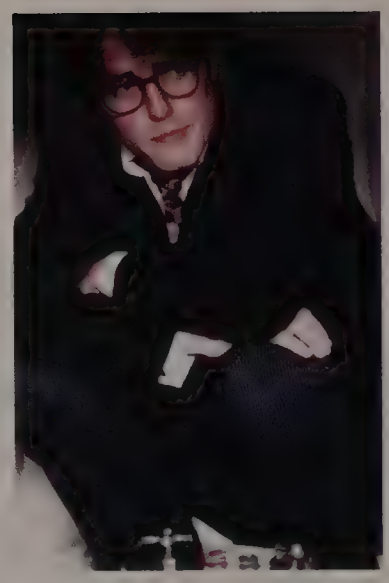
3. DO USE RELIGION NICELY.

For many couples, readings from holy scripture form a crucial part of their wedding ceremony. They enlist members of the clergy to help them find verses that speak to their personal situation. Fortunately, there's a lot to choose from. The King James Bible, for instance, sports more than 30,000 verses, but a disproportionate number of the weddings I've attended lately include the same four, which serve to remind us that even God thinks it sucks to be single. I bring you the ever-popular Ecclesiastes 4: 9–12 (the italics are mine):

"Two are better than one, because they have a good return for their work. For if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow: but woe to him that is alone when he falleth; for he hath not another to help him up. Again, if two lie together, then they have heat: but how can one be warm alone?"

Come on, now. Each unattached guest saved you plus-one on your catering headcount. The least you can do is choose a passage that doesn't fill us with woe at your wedding.

4. DON'T MICROMANAGE YOUR GUESTS.



Every wedding is different and comes with its own ground rules, and guests appreciate a good "what to expect" message in the invitation. Getting married in the middle of the Negev Desert in August? Suggest sunscreen. Marrying royalty? Insist on formal wear. You want your friends to feel comfortable and to avoid embarrassing situations.

But know when to say when. If your invitation starts to read like a handbook, then bust out the red pen. "We got this giant package of materials with all these multicolored pieces of paper telling us what to do," says one guest, who asked to remain anonymous, bridezilla in mind. "One of them said that we were not to smoke at the wedding, nor were we to wear clothes that we had ever smoked in before, because the bride was just that sensitive. This was in spite of its being an outdoor wedding. On an island. In the middle of a nor'easter."

At the wedding, "each of the guests received a scented soy candle," the guest continues. "That was nice. But each scented soy candle included a note explaining that this was a scented soy candle, and that if we were not partial to scented soy candles, we should pass this candle on to someone who was partial to scented soy candles. There was a little too much information at this wedding."

5. DO SEAT YOUR GUESTS HUMANELY.

The aforementioned "two are better than one" Bible verse is never truer than during a wedding reception with assigned seating. "I attended one wedding where the bride put me at a table with four couples I didn't know," says Sari Boren, a museum educator from Cambridge. "It was awful. Every time the band played a decent song, all four couples got up to dance and left me alone at the table, which was located right next to the dance floor. I had to keep getting up and walking around just so I didn't look like a loser."

On the other hand, it's not a great idea to sequester all the single people in one spot. "I've been a single guest at a wedding, and I have to say, it sucked. The couple would try to be helpful by putting all the single people together at the same table, but it felt like the losers' table," says Erin Almond, a writer from Somerville who eloped last year. (Her husband, author Steve Almond, recently cowrote a novel about two single cynics who meet at a boring wedding.)

It's a common mistake. "Well-meaning wedding planners go off the rails in fundamentally misunderstanding what it means to make weddings 'bearable' for their single guests," says Leslie Talbot, author of Singular Existence, a nonfiction book that champions solitude. "In the planners' eyes, they think they want to somehow lessen the mental anguish they are certain the single guests are feeling about still being 'alone' and 'out there' in the face of everyone else's marital bliss. In reality, we're just cringing in a dark corner of the 'singles table,' surrounded by obnoxious stock traders who are pounding scotch… and speculating on how many times the groom is going to be able to 'hit that' during the honeymoon."

There's no perfect solution for a reception seating chart. It's not Sudoku. But balance and common sense are good rules of thumb. "Try to put each person next to at least one person they already know," advises the etiquette page at www.perfecttableplan.com. Recent bride Simone Cote seconds the seating strategy. "No one will have fun if their friends are across the room and they're forced to socialize with your lecherous uncle Ted," says Cote, a copyeditor from Somerville who tied the knot in February (and doesn't actually have a lecherous uncle Ted). "Along the same lines, seat the icky people together so you don't have to foist them on your friends."

If circumstances leave you with no choice but to seat a single person with a table full of couples, try to choose those with good manners. "Men should always ask single women to dance, even if they are with a girlfriend or wife," Boren says. "This is common courtesy, and it's what our parents' generation does. My parents said they would never get up to dance and leave a single woman alone at a table. In fact, at one wedding, their table was all couples and one single woman, and everyone made sure someone was always at the table and that the men danced with the single woman."

6. DO KEEP THE BOOZE FLOWING AND THE DJ IN CHECK.

Hosting an open bar for a five-hour reception is pretty expensive, and your guests will understand if you can't foot the entire bill. But please make sure there's always someone, somewhere, serving up drinks—even if it's one of the ushers doling out cans of PBR in the parking lot. "We have to have somewhere to escape to when your great-uncle Izzy decides it's time to cut loose with the Macarena," Talbot explains.

And hey, if you want the Macarena on your play list—along with the Chicken Dance, the Hokey Pokey, the Alley Cat and the Electric Slide, for that matter—that's your prerogative. But don't force it.

"Let's put it this way: It's bad enough to play 'YMCA' at a wedding, but does the DJ actually have to drag people onto the dance floor and put costumes on them for the song?" says Dennis Callaghan, a single software analyst from Watertown. "I was the Indian chief, in case you were wondering." IB

PLAIN JANE WINS THE DAY

In a retelling of Jane Austen's Persuasion, Laurie Horowitz' novel The Family Fortune explores Brahmin Beacon Hill.

Jane Fortune's punning name refers to her Boston family's mossy old money and also to her own subtler, shifting luck. Jane's widowed father and ditzy sister, Miranda, rent out their Louisburg Square house to bolster failing finances as she administers a philanthropic family foundation nurturing young writers. While Miranda mocks her spinster sister—"At your age you should wear a little makeup. It would be a service to society"—Jane modestly meets and quietly falls in love with a young literary hopeful, Max Wellman, whom she helps through the foundation. With delicious twists of character and turns of phrase, Horowitz brings to life the foolishly fun family members, friends and opportunistic writers who swirl around unassuming Jane. As they tumble around the Vineyard and Beacon Hill, Jane trudges on, appealingly self-deprecating, unaware of her sturdy goodness. Max, meanwhile, becomes literarily lionized and a man-about-bed in the wider world. The slow, curling way that these two former lovers, seemingly of different styles, inch back together over time is a joy to read.

SEE BOSTON FOR THE FIRST TIME, AGAIN

Boston by Foot (77 North Washington St., Boston; 617-367-2345; www.bostonbyfoot.com) offers architectural walks, lectures, special events and guide training. Tours run May through October. $12, adults; $8, ages 6–12.

Don't wait for that next visit from the relatives. Play tourist for a day with Boston by Foot and get your own refresher course on the city's architecture. You'll be an authority on urban planning in no time. Indeed, the nonprofit's Victorian Back Bay tour covers four structures in one stop, bringing you to the intersection of the 19th-century Trinity Church, the Public Library, Old South Church and the Copley Hotel, all built on former marshland squish. The walk later takes you past the 1970s Hancock Tower, reflecting those august elders in its glass, giving you a thrilling sense of Boston's structural diversity. Along the way, you'll learn to spot mansards, statues, inscriptions, ornately carved adornments, European echoes and the resonance between styles. Feel like an expert by the end? Sign up for guide training, which begins this month, and lead your own walks. Tuition for the six-session series costs $95 for future tour leaders, $150 for auditors. You can also pay $35 for a single course. Or try the other tours, which include Beacon Hill, Boston by Little Feet (designed especially for children), Boston Underfoot, the Heart of the Freedom Trail, Literary Landmarks and the North End.

GET YOUR GIFT ON

Forget the art—the new ICA (11 Northern Ave., Boston; 617-478-3101; info@icaboston.org) has a killer shop.

The Institute of Contemporary Art offers Boston's intelligentsia plenty of reasons to visit. But shoppers and, dare we say, philistines, take heed: The ICA houses a great gift shop. This isn't any old store, either. Its merchandise matches the museum's spirit, showcasing a playful, modern aesthetic, high craftsmanship, originality and irreverence. Fun finds include Dynomighty's rare earth jewelry, which contains magnets that morph into varying shapes and lengths. In2Designs sells lanyards that, vinelike, extend long enough to twist around your waist. Ryan Kundret's pieces are spare, edgy and twiggy—jewelry, in short, that you might wear to an ICA opening. Also amusing are Zipper Flowers, combining those very ingredients in a pin. Wallets made of stainless steel paradoxically feel like silk, while those constructed of duct tape simply feel mysterious. Dishes that'll kick up any dinner party include the Splash Bowl, with its irregular glass borders, and for the kids' table, plastic cups that bulge and lean in comic shapes. Also for the home: vases and clocks that combine delicate white patterns with shiny mirrors that suggest trompe l'oeil.

SWEET AS HONEY

The InterContinental Hotel's Miel transports the waterfront with Provençal flair.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

The opening of the InterContinental Hotel last summer brought an exciting new hospitality resource to the Boston waterfront. I haven't seen the sleeping rooms, but the public spaces are grand—one might even say grandiose, given their extraordinary dimensions.

The dining room, perhaps 100 feet in length, extends along almost the entire eastern side of the building, overlooking the harbor. Fortunately, a skilled designer has made judicious use of room dividers, banquettes, well-spaced tables, greenery and other touches to make the capacious room appear smaller and cozier than it is. Large wooden beams traverse its high ceiling, while black wrought-iron chandeliers with electric candles and recessed lighting fixtures illuminate the expanse. The black wrought iron is carried over to imposing grills that screen the entrance podium and bar from the dining room, and a large stone fireplace with small potted lemon trees on its mantle dominates half the room. Shelves of étagères are lined with faience and pottery, and oak-framed terra cotta tiles cover the floor. The furniture, draperies and upholstery wear a rich palette of colors, although trendy yellow dominates to give the room a bright, cheery aspect, as if evoking the Provençal sun to relieve a rather unfriendly spell of damp, cold Boston spring weather. A small room suitable for private parties of 12 or fewer, commanded by an enormous round olive-wood table and a massive chandelier constructed of several dozen carafes of olive oil, lies between the kitchen and the dining room. The entire impression is of a Provençal mas (country estate) on a grand scale.

Atlantic cod

I knew we were in for a treat when the server brought out our own carafe of extra-virgin olive oil to enjoy with crusty French baguettes and exquisite oatmeal-cranberry loaves. Though the hotel calls its restaurant Miel (French for honey), the fruity olive oil and its ubiquitous Mediterranean companion—fresh, minty basil—dominate the cuisine. These flavors quickly manifested themselves in a winner of a first course: pistou ($7). An aromatic, robust peasant soup that I first encountered in the Franco-Italian town of Menton on the Ligurian coast, it arrived green with fresh basil and heady with garlic. Its green and white beans and sweet-savory, earthy carrots warmed the soul as well as the body on a frigid evening. Continuing this theme, but upping the carbohydrate quotient, was a vegetable tian, or casserole ($12), containing zucchini, rice, eggplant and a touch of tomato, richly bathed in olive oil with more fresh basil.

Crevettes au fenouil ($19)—large, perfectly textured shrimp sautéed with fennel seeds and garlic—arrived in a small, very hot wrought-iron wok. The chopped tomatoes and another welcome infusion of the minty basil madè this preparation a multidimensional treat that justified its aggressive price. Caesar salad ($11), a huge bowl of crisp inner leaves of romaine lettuce tossed with a mustardy dressing, came with a crunchy baguette crouton, a large, ultrathin slice of fried Parmesan cheese and two plump anchovies that were a far cry from the scrawny, oily critters usually encountered in small tins. Given its substantial size, the salad could have sufficed for an entire lunch. The same went for the "petit farcis Niçois" ($16), stuffed vegetables prepared and served in the style of the French city of Nice. "Petit" was clearly a misnomer, however: This dish consisted of the two hefty zucchini halves hollowed out and stuffed with braised, shredded lamb and presented on an elongated white oval plate with pointed ends. In between the two zucchinis, a tomato, also stuffed with lamb, basil and olive oil, showed what can be done to bring an out-of-season fruit to its highest and best use. The only disappointment among the starters was an off-the-menu special one evening: grilled, marinated calamari salad. This cold salad started with good greens that included roquette, a French variety of arugula, and a decent vinaigrette dressing, but the soft, almost slimy squid and mushy red-pepper strips did the dish in.

Of the main courses, the magret de canard ($21), duck roasted with lavender, honey and coriander seeds, brought slices of rare, juicy, richly flavored duck breast accompanied by a small casserole of the vegetable tian. Only the celeriac that came under the duck, in the tiresome layering custom that has become a restaurant cliché, flawed the dish. Atlantic cod ($26), poached in a wonderful minestrone of lima beans and sliced carrots, boasted firm texture and fresh flavor that evidenced the care taken in its preparation. A marvelous garnish of succulent olives came as a pleasant surprise. Chanterelle gnocchi ($20) brought a large plate of light, silky-textured pasta that had been sautéed with firm but tender baby zucchinis quartered lengthwise and perfectly textured chanterelle mushrooms with a distinctive woodsy flavor. A sauce that combined Moulin de L'Olivette olive oil and mild cheese formed a delicate coating over the pasta and vegetables.

Even in a Provençal restaurant, one can get a hankering for beef. More important, the realities of an American hotel restaurant require that the kitchen be Its côte de boeuf grillée aux herbes $32) consisted of a thick, well-marbled ib steak cooked to the point of perfect exture, tender and juicy but resilient, its obust beef flavor enhanced by grilling nd serving on the bone. This beef-lover's elight came with a delicious, cheesy zuc-hini gratin.

The star of Miel's desserts, a sweet rovençal soup ($9) of sautéed blue, lack and red berries, candied olives and avender ice cream, with a twisted al-nond tuile, was served in a striking, in-erted convex plate with a small well in he middle. Less successful but still en-oyable, the crème brûlée ($9) had subtle vertones of orange and honey, with a nellow, noncloying sweetness. Flourless hocolate cake ($8), not worthy of its lessert or main course companions, eemed dry and banal, with a scoop of ice ream that was hard as a brick, masking ny semblance of flavor. A rich raspberry auce ladled around it brought only par-ial redemption.

When Miel first opened and I dropped y to peruse the menu, I thought it pricey in the extreme. Either my first impression was inaccurate or the restaurant has lowered the prices on its dinner menu, since it now contains definite bargains like the pistou, the chanterelle gnocchi and even the poached cod. On the other hand, its wine list has remained in the stratosphere, with only a couple of red-wine selections running under $40. Moreover, one of those lower-priced reds wasn't available on the night of my first visit; however, the waiter replaced it at the same price ($36) with a 2004 Cuvée Mystique Corbières Reserve, which was very dry—almost austere—with a distinctive "goût de terroir," a perfect accompaniment to the food. On a second visit, Jean Luc Colombo's Rosé de Côte Bleue, a rosé with good acidity and full-bodied Provençal flavor, could have served as Exhibit A in an argument that rosés don't have to be light and frivolous.

Service throughout both of my meals at Miel was impeccably professional, informed and attentive. The staff have been well-trained, and their unfailingly sunny dispositions enhanced the Provençal ambiance and culinary focus. It's difficult not to love this place. IB

Dining No Longer a Drag

Dot's Dbar undergoes a Coombs-over.

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

When Dbar debuted in Dorchester, a clear line was drawn between its dual identity as both a restaurant and a gay nightclub. After the kitchen closed at 10 pm, "D," according to the original Web site, stood for depravity and decadence, as well as the occasional drag show.

Enter Chris Coombs, young (early 20s), who earned his culinary expertise at a couple of Relais & Chateau properties (Toppers at the Wauwinet in Nantucket and the Inn at Little Washington in Virginia) and most recently under chef Scott Hebert at Troquet. He started to work one day a week at Dbar last February to supplement his income, when "the gay bar was about 70 percent of the business," he recalls. Soon after he was promoted to executive chef.

Today, thanks to a well-executed and well-priced menu (entrées under $20) and word of mouth, "we have over an hour wait for dinner Tuesday through Saturday," says Coombs. Friday and Saturday nights, when the 50-seat restaurant doesn't accept reservations, are "a free-for-all," he adds. What's more, diners aren't necessarily neighbors.

"During the week, we run zip codes from JP, Dorchester and the South End, but on the weekends we see Newton, Wellesley.... We see families, women, children," says Coombs. "We've evolved into being a bistro, and business is up 70 percent."

Dbar still makes its nightly transformation into a club at 10 pm, but times have changed: The biggest draw isn't a flamboyant drag performer from Manhattan, but a soft-spoken chef who takes pride in the performance of his kitchen: "We go two or three weeks without having a single dish sent back," says Coombs.

THE PICKLE-DOWN ECONOMY

What was once Johnny's Biltmore Café, a divey bar in Newton Upper Falls, is now simply the Biltmore, a "gastropub" with a Boston-seasoned chef and one of just two restaurants in Newton with a seven-day liquor license. What's more, it's open until 1 am. Yes, the kitchen closes at 10 pm, but bar snacks like creamy deviled eggs with house-cured bacon are available late. It's just the sort of nibble you want with the house martini: a "dirty" martini concocted not with a bleu-cheese-stuffed olive, but with pickle juice and a big half-sour pickle spear.

Pickles are big at the Biltmore. Executive chef Seth Morrison—most recently Tim Partridge's right-hand guy at the former Perdix in the South End, and a veteran of the East Coast Grill kitchen—rolls out his fresh pasta, makes his own ricotta cheese and has a penchant, if not a fetish, for making pickles. Many, many pickles.

Dbar chef Chris Coombs

"We've done interventions with him, because he pickles everything," says proprietor Rebecca Roth, with amused exasperation. "Grapes, kumquats..."

Expect a simple, pubby menu, with dishes marked by extra care, top-quality ingredients and fair prices (everything under $20). The tuna melt is made with cold-smoked tuna loin; the caesar salad is topped with deep-fried capers; and a giant ravioli is sauced with a luscious asparagus and mushroom broth, and served with a trio of mushrooms—shiitake, hen-of-the-woods, and chanterelles. No pickles there...

AT THE TAPAS OF HER GAME

Congratulations to Rachel Klein, executive chef of Om Restaurant & Lounge; she triumphed over two local chefs (John Critchley of Toro and Adam Halberg of Via Matta) in the James Beard Foundation's annual Tapas Challenge. Her winning entry: a "small plate" made up of "croque madame, raclette, mushrooms, porcini cream, Wolf's Neck Farm filet mignon, herb-crusted and deep-fried quail egg, and currant gastrique." Must've been a TALL small plate for this competition. IB

WINE

Much Ado About Merlot

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

Yes, there are people who still drink merlot. Millions of them. Maybe they haven't seen Sideways, but the reality is, many people don't view their choice of wine as a personal fashion statement or some kind of declaration of their core identity. Most of us just want something that tastes good. That's merlot: a good-time, easy-listening but melodic red that you don't have to fuss too much over while you get on with more important business.

So why does this grape currently have such a bad rap? Success. As we've rapidly changed from a liquor-and-beer-swilling to a white-wine-sipping nation, and now a red-wine-drinking one, merlot has very often been the final stop. The worldwide wine industry planted hundreds of thousands of acres of merlot over the past few decades. Forecasting popular tastes isn't a precise art though, and it takes at least four years after sticking a vine into the earth before you get much wine you can sell. So imagine the collective consternation when some tortured-crackpot aspiring novelist comes along declaring that merlot is a drink for terminally superficial boors. Luckily for all those grape growers, not that many consumers appear to have listened.

Unfortunately, restaurants and stores feature a lot of diluted-tasting, thin or otherwise unpleasant schlock in a bottle masquerading as authentic merlot. That's what happens when people demonstrate they'll buy something just because they recognize the name on the label. So while you won't currently impress many sommeliers or wine shop employees if you ask them for a merlot recommendation, if you choose carefully you can find some really delicious bottles at reasonable prices. In fact, in my recent merlot blind tastings, I've found a number of outstanding wines—listed below in ascending order of preference.

Red Rock, California, 2005 ($12). The massive Gallo empire knows quality. Under some of its subsidiary labels, Gallo's been quietly producing wine—especially red wine—that hits a particularly enjoyable taste profile: juicy, mellow, round and quite flavorful. It certainly has the expertise and the resources. This one is sold primarily in restaurants. It has a somewhat tarry, earthy, spicy aroma with almost sweet, very smooth black-cherry flavors and minimal tannins that make it a really good choice for an herb-roasted chicken.

Oyster Bay, Hawkes Bay, New Zealand, 2005 ($12). This exciting bottle clearly shows that Marlborough sauvignon blanc is only one of many delightful flavors New Zealand has to offer. From the premier wine region of the country's warmer North Island, this merlot has a slightly herbal, mushroomy fragrance with dark-roasted red-berry and earthy flavors. It has a cedary, slightly tannic feel, more reminiscent of Bordeaux than California. An excellent choice with a burger.

Rodney Strong, Sonoma, 2003 ($18). This noted Sonoma winery makes a merlot in a flowery, raspberry-flavored mode that has good, tart acidity and juicy flavor. It tastes more Russian River than Alexander Valley, although the spec sheets from the winery declare just the reverse. It also doesn't taste as though it's been aged for more than two years in American oak barrels. In fact, the wood character is underplayed, and the brightness of the charming fruit would suggest matching it with a wide range of spicy chicken or fish dishes.

Martin Ray, Napa Valley, 2003 ($20). This wine has major league stuff—very aromatic with tree bark, prune, earth and black-cherry notes. It shows what fine merlot is all about: outstanding balance, down-the-middle-of-the-plate flavors. The two-plus years of wood treatment match the fruit intensity well. Serve this to your pinot-obsessed friends without saying what it is, and then watch them backtrack when they hear it's merlot.

Marquis Phillips, Southeastern Australia, 2005 ($16). The class of the tastings. Rich and intense with aromas of red cherry, cocoa and pepper, this Aussie winner has a flavor that echoes the nose: molten chocolate with lingering, berry-like fruit. If this sounds appealing, run, don't walk, because it probably won't be around for long. It's a steal. IB

Music: All That Jazz

Boston's got that swing, baby. And to prove it, here comes an eight-day event, proclaimed JazzWeek by mayor Tom Menino. The festivities kick off with an All-Star Jazz Blowout at the Berklee Performance Center April 21. Featuring drummer Max Weinberg (from Late Night With Conan O'Brien), the concert showcases faculty and student musicians from universities around town. Other offerings include nightly performances at Borders Bookstore in the Back Bay (check out 14-year-old Brookline prodigy Grace Kelly playing her sax April 27), "Perspectives on Jazz" seminars at the Boston Public Library and family shows at the Center for Latino Arts in the South End. Just in time, the South End's long-awaited Beehive, slated to present live music nightly, is scheduled to open its doors that week. Call or see the JazzBoston Web site for schedules and locations. (888-671-0993). www.jazzboston.org/jazzweek. —LPK

diMio's Dan Adelson

TUE./MAY 1

Tastings: Pepperoni and Pinot

Who says wine goes only with dressy dishes? Sure, we enjoy the highlife now and again, but sometimes cab tastes just as good with comfort food. On May 1, diMio, the authentic Neapolitan shop in Porter Square, hosts an event that speaks right to our hungry hearts: a tasting that pairs pizza and wine. Of course, this is no ordinary pie. "Pizza in this area is like politics," owner Dan Adelson tells us. "People like what they like. But what sets us apart from some of the other places is our ingredients. We use almost completely organic products and don't use things like garlic powders or manufactured oregano. Every pizza and every ingredient is made to order." For the tasting, Adelson will serve an assortment of red and white wines with pizzas that range from basics like plain and pepperoni to more creative options like shrimp scampi and gourmet duck breast. *1782 Mass. Performing Arts: A Good Yarn

Mike Daisey

Boring history teachers and long-winded grandfathers may make you wary of storytelling, but when the Moth, a Manhattan-based group, comes to town April 23, put your fears aside. Performing at the Boston Center for the Arts' Calderwood Pavilion as part of a larger tour, the Moth spins tales, ranging from the heartbreaking to the hilarious, you'll happily pay to hear. Personalities including Andy Borowitz of The New Yorker, author Jonathan Ames, and locals Steve Almond and Lauren Slater give storytelling a new name. They don't use notes, speaking off-the-cuff on a predetermined theme—in this case, "out on a limb." BCA, Calderwood Pavilion, 527 Tremont St., Boston (617-933-8600). www.bostontheatrescene.com. 8 pm. $18 —RL

Books & Poetry: Meet the Kerrys

It seems that Massachusetts senator John Kerry and passionate kisser Al Gore now have a lot more in common than failed presidential bids. On April 21, Kerry and his wife, Teresa, visit the Harvard Memorial Church to read from their new book This Moment on Earth: Today's New Environmentalists and Their Vision for the Future. For the project, the Kerrys traveled nationwide to investigate a series of green issues and, in the process, talked to a host of individuals, groups and communities committed to conservation. The book is a tribute to these environmental pioneers. Will solar panels soon appear atop the Kerrys' digs in Louisburg Square? Stay tuned... Harvard Memorial Church, 1 Harvard Yard, Cambridge (617-661-1515). www.harvard.com. MBTA: Red Line to Harvard. 12 pm. $5. —RL

CityScope: Women Do Wine

Wine collective founder Thrace Bromberger

Move over, Bacchus. The ladies are back in town. Wine 101 brings seven West Coast women, all of them vintners, to Boston for a primer on vino. The cultivated females (no pun intended) will break down the sometimes-daunting subject—from choosing wisely when dining out, to pairing foods when eating in, to entertaining with the best blends. Along with tastings and hors d'oeuvres, the evening includes a goodie bag, a raffle and mingling with aficionados (old and new). And it's for a good cause: Proceeds benefit the Virginia Thurston Healing Garden, which provides nonmedical services to women with breast cancer. Back Bay Events Center, 180 Berkeley St., Boston (978-456-3532). www.healinggarden.net. 6-8 pm. $50. —LPK

Diggers Digs Deep

Character and detail make the most of a coming-of-age cliché.

BY SEAN BURNS

Ever since Barry Levinson remade Federico Fellini's I, Vitelloni and called it Diner way back in 1982, watching a bunch of misfit males belatedly, often quite reluctantly, stumbling their way into adulthood has become something of an American independent film cliché. But familiarity doesn't always have to breed contempt. Truth be told, I tend to have a soft spot for these kinds of movies, and I like to think that's not just because I fit the above description.

Katherine Dieckmann's Diggers won't be winning any awards for originality, but this quiet, carefully sketched portrait of a few friends in a Long Island fishing community has a strangely affecting, lived-in charm that makes for an agreeable stroll down some well-trod terrain.

Ken Marino, Josh Hamilton, Ron Eldard and Paul Rudd find themselves stuck in a rut.

It's September 1976, and a big-money commercial seafood operation called SouthShell has been leasing off a healthy chunk of the local waters, making it next to impossible for the local, independent clamdiggers to earn much of a living. These are hard-scrabble, regular guys, following in the footsteps of their fathers and grandfathers, heading out early mornings in rickety boats, rustling up whatever they can in order to get by. It's an entire way of life that's quickly coming to a close, and these four friends can't figure out where to go from here.

Paul Rudd's Hunt is the quietest of the crew, and as per the way these stories always work, he's nurturing some long-stifled artistic aspirations, discreetly snapping black-and-white Polaroids, which he promptly hides away. Hunt's one of those guys who always seems under a cloud, but especially since the recent death of his old man, a crusty son-of-a-buck he never really got along with.

Lozo's the loudmouth of the gang. Played by screenwriter Ken Marino from beneath a magnificent bushy moustache, he's always about 30 seconds away from a screaming match with his long-suffering wife (Sarah Paulson) or one of his many hyperactive children. Initially boorish to the point of annoyance, Marino's performance becomes more effective as the film wears on, as we gradually understand that Lozo's quick-tempered outbursts are a direct result of his family's perilous financial situation. With six mouths to feed and another bun in the oven, his increasingly paltry catches won't be paying the bills for much longer.

Josh Hamilton's conspiracy-minded Cons makes up for the shrinking revenue by selling weed, but it's tough to figure out how he turns a profit, considering how much of the stuff he winds up smoking himself. Meanwhile, cheerfully shallow lady-killer Jack (Ron Eldard) seems perfectly content shacking up with an interchangeable gaggle of loose women, until Hunt's recently divorced sister Gina (Maura Tierney, giving the film's best performance) begins calling him up in the middle of the night and making some unexpected demands.

Diggers is content to let the days drift in and out in a gray, autumnal haze, with each of these folks slouching tentatively towards some sort of realization. It's not difficult to see exactly where this whole thing is going; the film's sneaky allure is not a matter of plot, but an accumulation of character and detail. Dieckmann's direction is more muted than one might expect from the material, emphasizing long silences and the stillness of the waters. Whenever Marino's screenplay veers too far into broad sitcom territory, the film quickly counters with a moment of throwaway lyricism.

Rudd, in particular, finds very interesting balance here, playing the withdrawn Hunt as downcast and aloof, but resisting that horrible urge to mope and stare blankly into space the way so many young actors try to suggest soulfulness these days (i.e. Kal Penn in The Namesake or Zach Braff in anything.) Rudd conveys his character's sadness without ever asking for your pity, something that's a lot harder than it looks.

So how perfect that he and Tierney should be playing siblings. The Hyde Park native is someone we see entirely too little of in movies these days, and perhaps this stellar turn will finally remedy that. Gina could've easily been a stock character, pushing middle age and only recently discovering feminism, thanks in no small part to walking in on her husband and a neighbor rutting away on her Formica countertop. It's very broad writing, and yet there's something inherently secretive about Tierney's screen presence, a stillness in her delivery that suggests far more than what's on the page.

Dieckemann makes the best of what seems to be a very limited budget, fumbling only with a climactic bar brawl that appears to be a patch-job of various locations. More convincing are the period-specific details, especially the worn-down, washed-out costumes that stand in sharp contrast to the loud, shiny garb we see whenever Hollywood studios try to replicate the 1970s. Such small pleasures have a way of adding up. iB

Blades of Glory ★½

The same initially semi-amusing joke repeate infinitum for a mercifully brief 89 minutes, choppy would-be farce pits Will Ferrell's bloa stupidly macho figure-skater against Naploeon namite Jon Heder's dorky, angelic swan of the and then twists the plot backwards into a triple forcing them to compete in the World Finals pair. The stars throw themselves into various ph cal comic contortions with reckless abandon, the gags never move beyond that same creepily mophobic Wild Hogs–routine, wherein we are pected to roar derisively just because these dudes look wicked gay. Heder recycles his Dyna performance right down to the hand gestures, Ferrell does the same blockhead, oft-undre alpha-male routine you already remember from chorman and Talledega Nights. First-time filmma Josh Gordon and Will Speck shortcut through n of the action in fake-documentary broadcast- montages, almost as if they didn't have the energ write any honest-to-god scenes. The lone unfam element here is a typically gonzo supporting t from Arrested Development's magician-genius W Arnett. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in suburbs.)

The Host ★★★½

Part Friday-night monster movie, part dysfu tional family saga, with a healthy dollop of mis thropic social satire tossed into the mix, B Joon-ho's The Host is a seriously funny, fright ingly relevant, altogether smashingly entertain riff on contemporary fears and anxieties. Sor like what might happen if Godzilla attacked Royal Tenenbaums, this roller coaster ride ch the redemption of one severely mixed-up bro while a gigantic reptilian tortoise-looking creat stomps its way through South Korea, eating p ple. Bong's last film was the sly genre mash Memories of Murder, and here he continues to f absurd comedy and humanity in the unlikelies settings. The Host veers into Dr. Strangelove te tory upon the arrival of the American army, sm gling quite a few snarky geopolitical allegories i the wildest creature feature you'll see all y Bonus points go to young actress Bae Du-na, deadpan dynamo who toplined the Brattle's rec rave Linda Linda Linda. She's one of the flat- funniest screen presences in movies right now. Jarmusch needs to write her a starring role, s (At Kendall Square.)

Hot Fuzz ★★★

A cheeky, affectionate British send-up of Ho wood's testosterone-crazed summer action extr aganzas, Hot Fuzz stars cowriter Simon Pegg tough-talking no-nonsense supercop transferre the sleepy country town of Sandford. Much these same filmmakers' Shaun of the Dead, Fuzz is a movie made by and for people who seen way too many movies. The humor lies no the actual gags, but in the way the flick min every stale action-movie trope of the past 15 ye transposing big-gun macho moviemaking te niques from countless urban adventures t quaint little rural village. It's best viewed as a lection of inside jokes, and buffs can spend ho afterwards pouring over all the little winks, n and references. Director Edgar Wright has re done his homework here, using just the right s copated crash-cuts, bombastic hero-worship c era angles and comically overblown explosi After seeing Hot Fuzz, I doubt it'll be possibl keep a straight face during a Michael Bay mo again, assuming one could ever do so in the f place. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square in the suburbs.)

The Lives of Others ★★★½

Turns out East Berlin wasn't such a nice plac live in 1984, a year presumably chosen wit wink and a smile by first-time writer-director rian Henckel Von Donnersmark as the setting this eerily quiet, breathtakingly suspenseful y Ulrich Muhe delivers a performance of brilli restraint and control as a ruthless Stasi true liever, suddenly discovering glimmers of a lo dormant conscience when assigned to shado fundamentally decent playwright (Powers Boo look-alike Sebastian Koch) who just might be ing and abetting some subversive pals during th dark days before the wall came crumbling do Reminiscent of Francis Ford Coppola's The C versation, The Lives of Others is all clammy p noia and creeping dread, with Muhe's poker-fa turn somehow giving you everything and noth at the same time. It's riveting stuff, watchin man discover just how badly his ideals have been twisted and perverted by power-mongering thugs in high places; enough to carry you through this otherwise crisp, understated picture's weird determination to offer more false endings than The Return of the King. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

The Lookout ★★★
This film's just the kind of solidly plotted, well-crafted B-movie film noir we haven't seen since The Usual Suspects and Memento made sure that every low-budget thriller had to have an annoying gimmick. Out Of Sight and Minority Report screenwriter Scott Frank's directorial debut is a no-nonsense throwback to the meat-and-potatoes crime yarns of yesteryear. Another shockingly good performance by TV refugee Joseph Gordon-Levitt anchors the film, here playing a once-cocky rich-kid hobbled by a debilitating brain injury. Our former golden boy now works as a bank janitor, trying to keep his facts straight with the assistance of a blind, mellow sidekick (Jeff Daniels, channeling Jeff Bridges in The Big Lebowski.) But when a couple of insidious, tattooed strangers (Match Point's sleazy Matthew Goode and Wedding Crashers' va-va-voomy Isla Fisher) enlist our fallen local hero in a misguided heist, Frank's nifty plot twists and left-turns foreground character development and the bleak, wintry Midwestern atmosphere. When all is said and done, The Lookout isn't much more than a decent yarn, well told. But it's also nothing less. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Namesake ★★
Movies aren't novels, an inconvenient truth that apparently escaped the gifted Mira Nair, who directed this well-intentioned, borderline interminable adaptation of Jhumpa Lahiri's bestseller. Forced to winnow down a dense, unwieldy 30-years worth of trials and tribulations faced by a family of Bengali immigrants, Nair opts for the greatest hits approach—summarizing several lifetimes in rapid-fire shorthand. Kal Penn, of Harold And Kumar Go to White Castle fame, stars as the stubborn, ungrateful son, rediscovering his cultural heritage only during his darkest moments of adversity. Drifting almost aimlessly through the decades, Nair's stumblebum reworking not only transplants Lahiri's story from Boston to New York City, but also feels more like a rushed collection of half-realized scenes, with her typical keenly observed behavioral details clanging against all sorts of hasty exposition and time-lapse dissolves. Books can afford to linger, ramble and digress, but the best films by and large tend to exist on short clocks and clear objectives, concepts anathema to The Namesake's pig-pile of haphazard incident and epic sprawl. (At Kendall Square and Embassy Waltham.)

Perfect Stranger ★
As if Catwoman wasn't already embarrassing enough, Halle Berry continues her sad post-Oscar slide into Sharon Stone–territory with this tawdry, not-nearly-sleazy-enough "erotic" thriller that wouldn't even pass muster by Skinemax After Dark standards. Starring as a horny, hard-boiled news reporter (cough) Berry goes undercover at a slick ad agency, attempting to seduce a confession out of a maybe-murderer played by a lost-looking Bruce Willis. Alas, all their flirtations take place online, and director James Foley isn't the first to get gummed up trying to find a cinematic equivalent for cybersex. Foley's a strange case, having directed both David Mamet's Glengarry Glen Ross and Madonna's Who's That Girl. This one falls firmly into the latter category, and the peals of raucous laughter that greeted my screening suggest maybe there's a joke somewhere that I just might be missing. Giovanni Ribisi plays an insinuating sidekick who might as well be nicknamed "red herring," and the whole of Perfect Stranger seems like a backdated Internet update to Jagged Edge, which wasn't very good in the first place. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Premonition ★½
Sandra Bullock sure seems to be having a lot of trouble with the space-time continuum lately, and this severely downbeat Lifetime-movie plays like the glum underbelly of last year's improbably entertaining The Lake House. Bullock again holds the screen with her unfussy melancholy, and as in that previous picture she's using some stubbornly unexplained metaphysical trickery to try and prevent the death of her beloved in a grisly car accident. But this time around everything's all gloomy and despondent, as Bullock's put-upon hausfrau experiences the worst week of her life in deliberately unchronological order, jumping from Wednesday to Saturday and then back again to

Will Ferrell takes a break from the ice in Blades of Glory

Tuesday under a dark cloud of grim portents and malevolent music cues. Bill Kelly's screenplay eventually writes itself into such a corner we're told, rather unconvincingly, that this is all "a question of faith." Director Mennan Yapo seems more interested in jolts and shock cuts, and you're left meditating on Bullock's unique charisma, wondering why Hollywood still hasn't figured out quite what to do with her. (At Boston Common, Fresh Pond and in the suburbs.)

Reign Over Me ★★★
There's always been something closed-off and kind of scary about Adam Sandler's screen persona, and, as was the case with P.T. Anderson's brilliant Punch-Drunk Love, this fumbling effort from writer-director Mike Binder uses the goofball comic's autistic flourishes to dazzling dramatic effect. Sandler stars as a former dentist who lost his family on 9/11 and has spent the ensuing years in a sort of emotional coma, obstinately returning to adolescence as a last resort. It's only upon reuniting with his old college buddy (a phenomenal Don Cheadle) that Sandler's slurry, angry Rain Man finally begins fumbling towards human contact once again. As in his Upside Of Anger, Binder proves himself adept at getting transcendent performances from his actors, only to sell them out with pat, sitcommy resolutions. There's a lot about Reign Over Me that feels phony and contrived, and yet much of it is tough to shake off. This time around, Sandler's idiot man-child routine is just a cover for a world of hurt, one almost impossible to fathom. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Shooter ★★
The Artist Formerly Known As Marky Mark breezes his way through this dopey, paranoid slog, making what should've been an unbearable First Blood knockoff a good deal easier to endure. Based on the first in a series of airport bestsellers by Pulitzer Prize–winning Washington Post film critic Stephen Hunter, Shooter follows Mark Wahlberg's retired supersniper Bob Lee Swagger (dig that name!) as he's played for a patsy in an assassination attempt on the president. Dorchester's favorite son uses a formidable amount of offhand, every-guy charisma to offset the sheer ludicrousness of the scenario. Exacting swift and brutal revenge on the sinister Halliburton-esque cabal led by Ned Beatty's positively Cheney slimeball senator, Wahlberg deliberately and deftly underplays this screenplay's countless goofy flourishes. Director Antoine Fuqua shoots everything in mashed-perspective, telephoto lens closeups that, for a movie about a long-range marksman, is either rank incompetence or willful perversity. Boston Legal's Rhona Mitra costars as an FBI agent who takes every urgent phone call in skimpy underwear. Yes, it's that kind of movie. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Fresh Pond and in the suburbs.)

An empty-headed spectacle that leaves a loathsome aftertaste, director Zack Snyder's blockbuster adaptation of the Frank Miller comic book reimagines the Battle of Thermopalaye as a monotonous homoerotic videogame. Gerard Butler hollers himself hoarse as King Leonidas, leading 300 Spartans into an impossible battle with something like a billion Persians, here seen astride mutant elephants at the behest of Rodrigo Santoro's nine-foot-tall Xerxes, who apparently labors under the delusion that he's playing RuPaul. Shot entirely in front of a green screen, with tacky, mocha-colored digital vistas and computer-generated extras added in after the fact, 300 certainly doesn't look like any movie you've seen before. In fact, it doesn't look like a movie at all, but rather a chintzy ad for some mysteriously swarthy, musky product you probably don't want to buy. 300's over-the-top bombast quickly becomes droning, and there's no weight or resonance to Snyder's pixilated imagery. It's just an endless barrage of outlandish violence and campy hyper-masculine posing, panderin the darkest fantasies of maladjusted prepubes boys. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in suburbs.)

Wild Hogs ★
Odiously devoted to the ugly comic notion nothing's more traumatic than being mistake a gay man, the latest live-action Disney e oozes bad jokes and panicked homophobia. Fa stars John Travolta, Tim Allen and Ma Lawrence seem to be surveying the wreckag their film careers, thinking back to happier when they could headline their own lousy tures, instead of having to share the screen cross-country motorcycle trip in this shoddily structed City Slickers knock-off. Garishly over incompetently directed and rife with unfu scatological blunders, the movie finds our po middle-aged losers in a nonsensical feud hambone Ray Liotta's rowdy biker gang. A por Travolta egregiously overacts, his silly doo-rag ing one of the year's most hilarious hairpie Allen looks bored, and Lawrence seems studio unwilling to make eye contact with his fellow formers. Leave it to a so-called family entert ment to teach children that violence solves e problem, and that those durned homosexuals are silly. Wild Hogs is hateful crap. (At Fresh P and in the suburbs.)

The Wind That Shakes the Barley ★★★½
Boasting the worst title in the history of mot pictures, famously proletarian director Ken Loa latest pits brother against brother, trying to fi way around the tormented, ceaselessly deba Anglo-Irish peace accord of 1921. Lacking eve trace of the twee emerald spackle that ta crowd-pleasers like Waking Ned Devine, The W is a tough row to hoe, subjecting the audienc brutal Black-and-Tan attacks and the violent chic disintegration of a once-promising medi student played quite well by Batman Begins' un gettable psycho Cillian Murphy. A confound Irish cousin to Steven Spielberg's Munich, Wind digresses for just long enough to eng every side of a horribly problematic situation, emplifying the great Jean Renoir line: "That's terrible thing about life, everybody has his sons." Loach shoots the madness with characte tic reserve, hanging back in mostly wide shots eschewing grisly closeups for a larger-scale, m contemplative look at violence, as if it was alm part and parcel of the rough-hewn Irish landsca A thoughtful and worthwhile film, even if it ruin my St. Patrick's Day. (At Kendall Square Waltham Embassy.)

Dr. Dog remains loyal to old-school pop and friendship.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

It was only three years ago that Dr. Dog managed to break loose from the basement. One night, singer-guitarist Scott McMicken handed a copy of his Philadelphia band's lo-fi pop CD Toothbrush to My Morning Jacket frontman Jim James, who soon invited Dr. Dog to tour with his fast-growing outfit.

"That event was among the most crucial turning points for us as a band," says McMicken, whose group hits the Middle East Upstairs April 26 and Pearl Street in Northampton the next night. "We had played maybe three shows, and we were barely functioning in our membership. When that tour got off, we had to figure out a lot of stuff under pressure."

Dr. Dog parlayed that pressure and trust into a modest breakthrough. The band bought a new microphone with the $1,000 it earned on the tour and recorded Easy Beat, a record that was praised in publications from Rolling Stone to the New York Times. But it was all a long time coming for McMicken and singer-bassist Toby Leaman, both 28.

McMicken and Leaman formally launched Dr. Dog in 1999, but they laid the groundwork as eighth graders in Chester County, Penn., forging a friendship during a field trip to New York. "We ended up sitting together on the bus, and from that point, we've just been sitting together on the bus," McMicken says. "I'd been playing guitar for a year and a half, and that really seemed to strike his fancy."

Leaman's father was a Methodist minister and his mother led the church band. "He could actually sing, and at that point in life, singing was something that I considered really embarrassing," McMicken says. "He also had this spontaneity about him where he was constantly making up songs. Off the top of his head, he'd sing you a whole song that had never existed. I'd strum and laugh along, and then we took that into actually writing songs together."

They practiced relentlessly and made four-track recordings through high school, but the pair never played a show. After McMicken's family relocated to Connecticut for his senior year, he moved back to Pennsylvania to reunite with Leaman and live under one roof while they attended West Chester University. "It was a really exciting point in life—to be 18 or 19 and in a house with a bunch of your buddies, with instruments in the basement," McMicken says.

Their buddy Doug O'Donnell became the first Dr. Dog accomplice, sharing a Beach Boys obsession by analyzing harmonies on the Pet Sounds box set. "We would just sit around and pick those songs apart, because it was such a thrill to see what was going into them," McMicken says. They even rehearsed with the unfulfilled goal of sporting striped shirts to sing those songs on the boardwalk at the Jersey shore.

Luckily, Dr. Dog didn't settle for being a Beach Boys cover band, but wove a similar aesthetic into its original music. "It's undeniable to me," he says of absorbing such classic DNA. "We've always been pop fanatics, and even the weirder [influences] never strayed too far from the pop paradigm."

Actually, it's the Beatles (Harrison as much as Lennon and McCartney) that Dr. Dog echoes most on its acclaimed new album We All Belong, which also nods to the Band and Wilco.

With We All Belong, Dr. Dog has finally found acceptance.

The quintet switched from an eight-track to a 24-track console for the new disc, which maintains an antiquated-yet-fresh charm. "You have to let the atmosphere and mood of the song dominate," says McMicken, adding of the 24-track process, "We dove in headfirst without really knowing how to swim, because we started to record and it just didn't sound like us. The spirit that we had from recording over the last six to eight years disappeared in this new air of professionalism and ambition. It took about three months to reorient ourselves and understand our context."

That context, he explains, emphasizes personal camaraderie and spirit over technological polish. Organist Zach Miller and drummer Juston Stens were each guitarists who switched instruments to seal a spot in the group, while guitarist Frank McElroy is a former fan.

That family mentality is reflected in band members' adoption of the almost-alliterative nicknames Taxi (McMicken), Tables (Leaman), Text (Miller), Triumph (Stens) and Thanks (McElroy). "It's unifying ourselves in the totally artificial context of being in a band," McMicken says.

At the same time, the guitarist embraces the singular detachment of performing in cheap sunglasses. "I feel so incredibly awkward looking someone in the eye while I'm playing," he says. "I think I'd have a nervous breakdown onstage if my sunglasses broke or I forgot to bring a pair to the show. It allows me a certain amount of distance, so I can shed the social paranoia and anxiety of performing and give my best to the music and the sound." iB

You've Got the PIN to My Heart

To the woman who found my Bank of America ATM card March 27: It seems that you ran all the way from the ATM next to Pemberton Supermarket on Mass. Ave. (between Porter and Davis) to my apartment. I'm so sorry that I didn't get to express how grateful I was for your kindness. Thank you! People like you do make this world a better place.

·cently on a packed Red Line train, I ıped to find a seat between Alewife ıd Park Street. Having entered my)th year, I had the requisite silver ıir, arms full of packages and a ightly pained expression knowing my ıances of being offered a seat were ım. At Porter Square, a young couple ıarded and crowded next to me, bbering about roommates, moving New York—the usual a.m. stuff. hen the guy sitting in front of me ıt up to leave three stops along, the ıung lady pounced on that empty at before I could even think to say, Thanks, I really appreciate the ıance to sit." She burrowed into the etro, making a great show of not oking up as I planted myself in front her. At the next stop, another guy ıt up and the kind young woman anding in front of him graciously otioned to me to have his empty at, and I did. Apparently, that lovely ıung lady with the Metro felt an ıtitlement that her parents ıdoubtedly instilled in her at an ırly age. The hairy eyeball didn't em to penetrate her selfish demeanor. did, however, apply an appropriate ırse upon the rest of her day.

For Pete's Sake!

was looking for cheap and meaningless ex, but not this cheap and meaningless. Sure, you warmed my heart (and my bed) on more than one occasion, as we spun a quickie at a lab party into a hot, sweaty night in P-town and then a series of booty calls that would make even Peter's head spin. The problem is that you did make Peter's head spin, behind my back. I was so wrong to expect a girl who's both classy and hot. In the end, I'm left thinking that either would have been nice.

Damned in the 'Ham

I've only been commuting on the Framingham line for five months, and although I often smile and say hello, I realize a few conversations don't make us best friends. Still, common decency should have made one of 15 people stop to see if I was OK when my battery died in the parking lot. I took the 5:30 pm out of South Station and arrived in Framingham to find that I'd left my headlights on that morning and my battery was dead. I was parked just outside the Framingham station; I stood in front of my pickup truck with the hood up, waiting for someone to offer me a jump. At least a dozen people hopped into their cars and looked me in the eye as they curiously drove away. Are we not a commuting family? Please know that I would delay my trip home by four or five minutes if I could help out a fellow train traveller. You may have also seen me give up my seat many times to a female rider or an older gentleman, or just squeeze in to make room for a third person to sit. Please consider your fellow commuters when an opportunity arises. I hope I'm not the last considerate guy left.

My Pediatric Princess

To the pediatrician with a penchant for J.P. Licks ice cream (especially the flavor of the month that you referred to as "crack cocaine"): Thanks for a fun few weeks of hanging out. We're pretty different people, but it was enjoyable getting a glimpse into your upbeat and colorful world. You'll make a great pediatrician when you finish your residency. Any child will know they're in good hands no matter their age or the severity of their injury or disease. Also, thanks for helping me realize a few important things about myself. You'll be remembered for your love of Ben & Jerry's White Russian, your knowledge of cannoli and your ability to buy seven dresses when you only need one. I hope you'll remember me any time you hear "Stat!" exclaimed in the hospital, when you try to light a fire unsuccessfully or see a bunch of newly blossomed daffodils.

It's Lonely in the Lockup

Ladies: How y'all doing out there in the real world? I know it's a hard life and a struggle for some of you, but always remember to stay strong and keep your heads up. Take it one day at a time. For all the ladies out there with a good heart and a good head on their shoulders, I'm incarcerated and will be wrapping up my bid soon. I'm African-American/Cape Verdean. I'm 23 years old, six feet tall and 250 pounds. I love romance, watching movies, clubbing and money. I'm hoping to hear from someone who likes what I like to do—who feels me. Also, my thanks goes out to the IMPROPER for always having such beautiful people in their magazine.

I Cry, Therefore I Am

To the philosopher: I really appreciated your sympathy the other night. I know I was a wreck and needed a shoulder to cry on. I'm so glad you brought up Ayn Rand; you made me see how I could utilize objectivism in my daily life. I really could have done without your Garden State–esque lines and solutions for my then-dysfunctional relationship. Still, you were a real pal that night. Thanks for sharing your beliefs and support!

rockie horoscope

APRIL 18 – MAY 1, 2007

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

The Aries new moon provides a good excuse to have another birthday celebration, especially if yours took place way back in March. Acknowledging that you're at the beginning of a brand new cycle will help clear your plate of the detritus and debris that fell on the real date (e.g., the otherwise occupied friends and your reluctance to accept being another year older). Now you'll be free to concentrate on your Taurus money house and relatively easy ways to transform good intentions into solid assets. For now: no pain, much gain.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Sometimes love is hard to get; other times it's as easy as falling off the roof. So while your Venus ruler transits airy Gemini and your head is in the clouds, try to keep your feet on the ground. Entertaining romantic thoughts about a client or a prominent person in your field may seem like a good idea, but for now the potential harm outweighs the benefits. Besides, it could be quite costly. Better to wait until the month ends before letting your prey know that you're on the same wavelength.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

There's a window of opportunity opening for Twins who are considering alternative career objectives. Although more money is always at the back of your mind, right now choosing the proper partner could be a more important factor. Also—and this isn't negligible—you'll have greater freedom of expression. Fortunately, while your Mercury ruler in fiery Aries forms rewarding aspects with Jupiter in Sagittarius and Saturn in Leo, both objectives are possible. Having magnetic Venus in your sign is another plus.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

A new moon usually presents an opportunity to drop what you're doing and start fresh. Since the Aries lunation this week occurs in your career house, that might not be such a hot idea. Nevertheless, you could take a different approach and focus on your own goals instead of what the boss/executive board/government official wants from you. Wretched excess is about to invade your workplace, and unless you're a bona fide extrovert (rare for a self-contained Crab), you're liable to feel like a fish out of water.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

There's lots of good news, not the least of which is Saturn's coming out of retrograde in your sign on April 19. Soon you'll sense that steely grip relax enough to lose the feeling that you're bogged down in details and drudgery. Meanwhile, frisky Jupiter in your Sag house of romance and recreation is chomping at the bit, ready to take an adventure you weren't expecting. There are other surprises—consider them opportunities to expand a close, potentially profitable relationship—before the end of April.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

It looks like you're going on the prowl for other people's money—and whatever other resources they're willing to share. A double whammy with the trail-blazing new moon and your resourceful Mercury ruler in independent Aries at the same time could lead to bold, atypical behavior for a reticent Virgin. And because you'll probably get a measure of support from your extended family, as well as a big shot working behind the scenes, you're liable to be more successful than you imagine. Just don't rely on your partner.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

Mixed messages from the fired-up Aries new moon in your marriage house: Consider taking a bold leap into the unknown without tossing a precious resource onto the pyre. Feeling adventurous about a partnership matter, yet cautious about a romantic encounter, seems like a contradiction. However, it's your Venus ruler that's stoking the fire and, in doing so, nudging you too close to the flames for comfort. Although the situation is sexy, better to let it percolate until loving Venus and idealistic Neptune trine on April 30.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

You may be glad to learn that duty-bound Saturn turns direct on April 19, after being in retrograde in your Leo midheaven since early December. And while your career may not have suffered in the intervening months, it probably didn't advance by leaps and bounds either. When will it? Probably around August, when Saturn forms a rewarding trine with your powerful Pluto coruler; but perhaps as early as mid-June, when your Mars coruler and Saturn trine. For now, focus on a pleasurable, compatible partnership instead of a hit-or-miss affair.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

Before the sun leaves Aries for the garden of earthly delights that is Taurus, consider using the enthusiastic fire energy of the Aries new moon to initiate a creative or recreational project. Sign up for a softball team or a series of concerts—anything that'll distract you from the unexpected upsets that may occur on your home turf. That's the place where destructive Mars joins unpredictable Uranus on April 28, a day to be out of the house, but not out of water or cash. Possibly an earthquake… or are the neighbors remodeling?

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

After four-plus months (since early December) in retrograde, your Saturn ruler finally turns direct on April 19. Never again (well, not for another 30 years) will it backtrack through your Leo house of shared feelings and shared resources (along with sex, magic and death). Whew! While the total leonine experience doesn't end until August, you could catch sight of a clearing in the jungle that has circumscribed your life since Saturn entered Leo in August 2005. The sun's shift into down-to-earth, scratch-my-back Taurus is also good.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

Be forewarned that the course of a true romance might not run smoothly until the end of the month. In the meantime, you can use the friction (i.e., heat) generated by flirtatious Venus dancing through the Gemini duality to bring in some bucks. And if the source of that income stream seems unusual, chalk it up to having unpredictable Uranus in your Pisces money house. While other influences are circling around you, it's the promise of a sexier social life that'll turn you on.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Seduction, aggravation or a bit of both? Having macho Mars in your sign sharpens your edge so that you'll tend to be more direct, and therefore more dangerous. Keep in mind that when the Warrior meets with unruly Uranus as the month ends, you could easily explode. At the same time, eager-to-please Venus will be rewarding your Neptune ruler with the artistic goodies they both treasure. The goddess is also drawing benefits from a generous donor or employer, thereby enabling you to help the folks at home. Interesting enough?

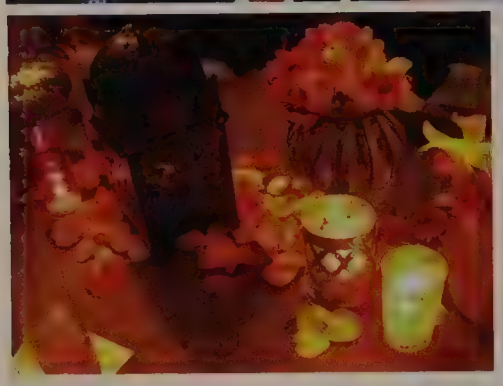
LAST SCENE HERE



BY JONATHAN SOROFF

At the Harvard Club, top row: the guests. Middle row: King Abdullah II of Jordan and George Faux; Josh and Carla Binswanger. Bottom row: the tables

MIDNIGHT AT THE OASIS...

The Harvard Club is perhaps the last place you'd expect to see tricked out like a Bedouin sheik's desert tent, but you could easily have mistaken it for Wadi Rum at the reception for King Abdullah II of Jordan to raise awareness and support for the boarding school he's building in the Middle East.

On hand were numerous pals of His Majesty from his Deerfield days, including the wildly funny Josh Binswanger and the delectable Carla, cochairs Chuck Irving with wife Mimi and John and Sarah Mattes, and such movers and shakers as marketing guru Kiran Ganda, the lovely Leslie Yerensian, and numerous equally dazzling others.

Guests sat on cushions at low tables strewn with rose petals and lit by candles, while fake palm trees swayed overhead and the normally somber room was transformed via Arabic music and light projections of Islamic patterns on the wood-paneled walls.

The charismatic king, meanwhile, charmed everyone who approached him, including one beautiful blonde to whom he said, "My wife would love that dress."

"Well, I can tell you where you can buy it for her," said the flattered female.

"I'm afraid it would be too warm for Jordan," replied the King, to which the blonde responded, "You could always turn up the air conditioning in the palace."

HOW DO YOU SAY "AULD LANG SYNE" IN CHINESE?...

It was like a quick trip halfway around the world (minus the jetlag), when the Asian American Civic Association hosted its annual Lunar New Year Gala and Auction at the Wang Center.

Four floors of Asian food and entertainment—embracing everything from sushi, pad thai and curry to lion dancers, hula girls and Japanese drumming—made for an especially festive evening, which attracted the likes of celebrity chef Ming Tsai, the emperor of the gala, and his empress, Madge Meyer, Channel 7 glamazon Frances Rivera and her husband, Stuart Fraas, hizzonah Mayor Menino, State Street honcho George Russell, force of nature Mary Chin, Back Bay nabob Steve Kunian and Wang jefe Joe Spaulding, to name a mere handful.

"Not only did they make me the emperor and give me an empress," joked Tsai, "but it says in the program that Frances Rivera is the mistress of ceremonies, so I guess I get a mistress, too!"

However, the evening's funniest comment came from the woman who said, "It's the year of the boar? Well, that explains my sex life."

At the Lunar New Year Gala, top row: Frances Rivera and Stuart Fraas. Bottom row: Ming Tsai; George Russell

AT LEAST THERE WASN'T A LINE FOR THE LADIES' ROOM...

The annual march of the penguins known as the Men's Event to benefit the Fenway Community Health Center took place at the Westin Hotel and, as always, attracted a largely gay, mostly male and almost uniformly good-looking crowd.

Present and accounted for: the evening's honoree, gazillionaire media mogul Ron Ansin, white-hot interior designer Dennis Duffy and his cochair, Stephen Earheart, restaurateur extraordinaire Gary Sullivan, New York drag diva Shequida, congressional widower Dean Hara (whose late husband, Gerry Studds, is the namesake for the event's award), the devilishly handsome Sean Fitts, Boston's de facto fairy godfather Harry Collings, catering genius Neal Balkowitsch and his partner, Donald Nelson, the inimitable Hat Sisters, Harvard factotum Bob Mitchell, news-anchor stud muffins Randy Price and David Brown, incorrigible scamp Michael Wong, the supersparkly Stewart Clifford, baroque cross-dressers Walter Hildner and Michael Gaucher, impish board member Michael Istvanko and his other half, Ron Harrison, the aptly named (for the event at least) former mayor of Somerville Dorothy Kelly Gay and her hilarious husband, Burt, übergroovy DJ Tom Yazbeck, and so on and so forth.

Following drinks and dinner (and a tolerably brief bit of "blah, blah, blahing"), everyone repaired to the dance floor, where the formally dressed crowd re-created a more recent penguin movie, Happy Feet, only with better pecs and abs and way more bumping and grinding.

As one guest put it, "It's like a cross between Dancing With the Stars and a circuit party."

DOES THAT COUNT AS CROSS DRESSING?...

Any woman who goes clothes shopping to find that she's magically shrunk several dress sizes but still can't find anything flattering to wear would've done well to attend Find Your Fit, a fundraiser for Dress for Success, held at the Hotel Marlowe.

The event, which attracted such wonder women as the organization's founder, Enith Levine, board member Jacqui Budd, PR powerhouse Stephanie Loeber and numerous others, featured cocktails, hors d'oeuvres, a silent auction and some words of advice from wardrobe consultant and best-selling author Mary Lou Andre, who began by saying, "Every time you open your closet door, you should see friends," to which someone muttered, "Oh, I've got plenty of friends who are in the closet."

At Find Your Fit, top row: Tom Thorne, Enith Levine and Tracy Tobin; Annika, Teri and Krista Kucheman. Bottom row: Christine Edmonds and Mary Lou Andre

That clearly didn't apply to the pair of men who perused a display of women's belts.

One of them said, "I'd look great in P-town in this," to which the other said, "You're right," and promptly plopped down $42 for a brown, blue and green one, saying, "I don't care if it's a woman's. I like it, and it fits me." IB

THE PROFESSIONALS

Boston takes its bartenders seriously. For example, when local favorite Peter Cipriani took a new gig behind the bar at Stella a few months ago, I heard about it immediately via text blast from one in-the-know friend, followed by e-mails from several others who broadcast the news like the juiciest celebrity gossip. Cipriani has appeared on our annual beloved bartenders list so many times that we've kicked him up to "most valuable" status, along with a few other pros who hold a permanent spot in this town's heart (see page 40).

Our list of 26 winners for 2007—chosen by reader ballot and by the traditional staff research (aka, hanging out in bars)—might even include some future MVBs. Fans praise their skill, speed, friendliness, memory, personality and presence. And this issue is our thanks to them for adding sparkle to the city.

BRIDEZILLA—NOT

While I found a few stories in the Bridal Guide humorous (April 18), I have to defend my fellow brides-to-be. As someone who's two months away from a wedding that I've been planning for almost two years, I have to say that being the bride isn't always pleasant. My fiancé and I are paying for our entire wedding (which costs pretty much my yearly salary after taxes), and we've had to put up with the constant banter from family and friends. If you can't go through one more wedding without your single-person pity party, politely decline the invitation. Otherwise, show up with a smile on your face and make the best of it.

You can manage to survive a five-hour party where your happiness isn't the biggest concern. Someone else's wedding is, surprisingly, not about you. It's about the bride and groom.

La Verdad

Ken's One-Two Punch

Ken Oringer hates to spill the beans, but burritos aren't real Mexican food. As a rule of thumb, if it takes two hands to eat, it's not authentic—it's American. Small, soft tacos: Now that says Mexico. And at the aptly named La Verdad ("the truth") in the Fenway, Oringer plans to honor the country's cuisine.

For West Coast transplants, this might sound too good to be… true (sorry). But Oringer, the foodie force behind Clio, Uni and Toro, has done his homework. As with all his projects, he traveled extensively to get the recipes right, taking along partners Michael Ginor and Patrick Lyons. "It was such an eye-opener," he says of trips that involved tasting tacos from Los Angeles to Encenita.

La Verdad brings this fact-finding to fruition. Handmade tortillas swathe the menu's mainstay: tacos that come in 14 flavors. San Diegans will be happy to see the pescado ($2.70)—fried fish with avocado purée, marinated cabbage, crema, salsa crudo and chipotle mayonesa. Other fillings include carnitas, chile relleno and chorizo. Under three bucks a pop, the tiny tacos can be eaten several at a time or paired with entrées like the roasted chicken ($14.95).

Cut the spice with sips of agua fresca (a fresh fruit drink) or tequila. La Verdad has agave "juice" covered, with some 61 choices lining the bar, which dominates the 65-seat dining room. Wrestling gear (think Jack Black in Nacho Libre) and Day of the Dead dolls keep the theme, while several flat-screen TVs remind diners this is Red Sox territory. In a nod to its surroundings, the restaurant runs a taqueria up front, where fans can grab a quick bite and then hang out on the patio pre- and post-game. Located on Lansdowne Street in the former Tiki Bar, La Verdad is part of a larger makeover to the clubby corridor.

It's simply not enough to tackle tacos and Lansdowne this spring—Oringer's slated to open steakhouse KO Prime May 8. His reason for entering the meat market: "I love steak, and I love steakhouses, but a lot of them are old boys' clubs. This is a more modern restaurant that happens to serve steak. A lot of steak."

He isn't kidding. The beef options run the gamut, averaging $24–$44 a person. Alternatives to red meat, including several seafood dishes, make the grade, too. But it's the appetizers and sides, with ingredients from local farms, that really set KO Prime apart. In place of the standard iceberg wedge, there's a market-greens salad ($12) with cabernet vinaigrette, herbs and flowers. And Okinawa sweet potatoes with fried shallots ($8) sure sound sexier than your typical mash.

In Spire's old space next to Kimpton's Nine Zero Hotel, KO Prime has a new look to go with the food. Cosmetic changes include crocodile-covered chairs and a cowhide rug in the 72-seat dining room. Jamie Bissonnette, formerly of Eastern Standard, mans the kitchen, while the bar turns out specialty cocktails. Wagyu beef tartare and tequila: Now that says Oringer.

INNER VIEW

Horror Heavyweight

Chuck Palahniuk made the literary scene with Fight Club nearly a decade ago. Today he reigns as king of the high-brow gross-out thriller—complete with an appropriately cultish following. He reads from his new serial-killer novel, Rant: An Oral Biography of Buster Casey, May 11 at the Coolidge Corner Theatre.

The Improper Bostonian: We've heard you send gift boxes to fans. True?

Chuck Palahniuk: Yeah, it fills a weird childhood need. I wanted a care package so bad as a kid. Every box ends up being a collection of 25 to 30 things. I try to find iconic things, like Whitman's candy samplers. I got a great deal on bloody severed fingers, so every box had one of those for a while.

IB: How do you keep readers hooked?

CP: I try to think of writing as storytelling, closer to movies. Movies move. People should be constantly taking action. They shouldn't be thinking, shouldn't be describing, they should be moving. When you read a verb like "kick," the part of your cerebral cortex that would light up if you were actually kicking lights up. The [brain] doesn't know the difference between words on a page and physical action. Also, books have an intimate consensual nature of consumption, [and they] have freedom to go to extreme places because of that consensual nature. The combination of more extreme content and more dynamic storytelling, I think, makes my books work.

IB: How easy is it to gross people out?

CP: It's a real balancing act. If you come on too strong people shut down immediately. You have to be charming and funny—present [the audience] with a gradual increase in challenging material. You build tension, release it with laughter. The whole time, you're acclimating people to greater atrocities. When they start to see where the third anecdote is going, it's too late. You have to start with something they know, like soap, then gradually morph those things into more extreme manifestations until you've transformed that familiar thing into something completely unexpected.

IB: How should your headstone read?

CP: "Tell me a story. Tell me a story you've never told anyone."

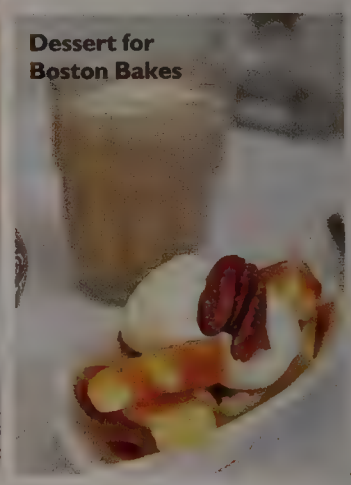
TASTY TIDBITS

Alla Salute!

Start Sal-ivating… Local pizza lovers are no strangers to Sal's, the tomato-pie purveyor with more than 30 locations around New England. While most of these joints bring a laid-back pizza-parlor feel to the table, Sal's newest venture—opening this month on the South Boston waterfront—is of the fine-dining variety. Salvatore's will, of course, offer the same selection of pizzas that have made Sal's a staple but will also feature a menu of upscale Italian entrées, including chicken voldostana, sausage cacciatore and a bone-in veal parmesan. The main room seats 98, but with the weather warming, the view-worthy patio sounds like a prime summer perch. 225 Northern Ave., Boston (617-737-7257).

Salvatore's



Tossed's Greek salad

Center Sage… Sage Restaurant may have literally headed south, but everything else about the place is looking up. On April 14, chef Anthony Susi reopened the eatery (formerly in the North End) on Washington Street in the South End, where Caffe Umbra used to be. The spot now seats 60 diners—about twice as many as its old haunt—and recently unveiled a spring menu featuring items like hand-rolled gnocchi with pulled rabbit, short-rib parmesan and truffle arancini. It also boasts a new bar, with a full beer and liquor license, that stays open nightly until 1 am. 1395 Washington St., Boston (617-248-8814). www.sageboston.com.

Veal loin at Sage

TomatoTime… When it comes to dining out, bigger isn't always better. Case in point: Hot Tomatoes, the new 12-seater from Jeff and Carmen Malloy, the husband-and-wife team behind the popular, cozy Carmen's restaurant in North Square. Also in the North End, Hot Tomatoes features an assortment of salads (with toppings like tuna niçoise and grilled shrimp), deli sandwiches (like roast beef and pulled pork) and a slew of signature pizzas. 261 North St., Boston (617-557-0033).

Speedy Salads… Since 1998, Tossed—a seller of made-to-order salads, sandwiches and crêpes—has owned the New York City greens scene. And this month, the healthy hot spot expands to the Hub. On May 9, the first Boston Tossed location will open in a 2,500-square-foot space in the Prudential Center seating 38 (with additional patio tables in the mall). Our favorite part of the Tossed experience: the online ordering. Head to Tossed.com, create your meal and submit the order. Your food can be ready in under 10 minutes. Prudential Center, Boston (617-424-8677). www.tossed.com.

Dessert for Boston Bakes

Do-good Desserts… Not that you need one but if you want an excuse to indulge in something sweet this month, mark May 7–13 on your calendar; those are the dates of the annual Boston Bakes for Breast Cancer fundraiser. Over the course of seven days more than 100 local restaurants will offer specialty desserts for about $5 apiece, with all proceeds benefitting the Eva Brownman Breast Cancer Fund. That's good news for your taste buds, and great news for the fight against breast cancer. www.bostonbakesforbreastcancer.org.

FASH FLASH

A Serious Crush

Usually, April showers bring May flowers. But who needs daffodils? Cute clothes, on the other hand, are a seasonal must. Lucky for us, shops have been sprouting in every Boston neighborhood nook and cranny. Beacon Hill boasts the latest bloom, on the upper end of Charles Street. Crush Boutique, a subterranean haven bursting with colorful clothing, gives girls an excuse to leave the guys standing in the brunch line at Panificio to sneak a quick peek. We love the Shoji screen, upon which hang oh-so-many baubles; the red and black shelves housing sophisticated clutches in playful patterns; the tables of must-have denim; and, of course, adorable (and affordable) summer frocks. Labels include Ernest Sewn, Central Park West, Prairie New York and Chelsea Flower, with prices ranging from $40 to $200 for shirts, $88 to $200 for denim and $50 to $350 for dresses. There are even some casual pieces for men. Friends since childhood, proprietors Laura Macris and Rebecca Penner are yet another duo of smart 'n' pretty 20-somethings abandoning their corporate careers for a bad crush on fashion. It might be a long-lived romance. Crush Boutique, 131 Charles St., Boston (617-720-0010). —Marni Elyse Katz

IMPROPER SPEAKING

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Cleared for Landing... When Ken Oringer opens a restaurant on Lansdowne Street (see "New in Town," page 10), it sends a message: There's something interesting brewing on this stretch behind Fenway. The Lyons Group, whose clubs dominate Lansdowne and which has partnered with Oringer on La Verdad, has plans to retool the street's image—and a Mexican restaurant is only the beginning. This month, Embassy turns into the Quarter, making Mardi Gras a nightly affair, and Modern morphs into Rocket, a lounge-y destination. (Both spots will feature live music.) Lyons has also proposed an entertainment complex that would replace Avalon and Axis with a cutting-edge facility. Stay tuned...

Fit and Fabulous... Working out is a way of life in this town, which means the May 21 arrival of Equinox, long considered the place to exercise in Manhattan, rates as exciting news for the leagues of endorphin addicts. The fitness mecca (just upstairs from sushi hot spot Douzo in the Back Bay) boasts all the must-haves (yoga, pilates, cycling and boxing studios), plus some more offbeat offerings (warrior-sati, anyone?). Stocked with high-tech equipment, the 40,000-square-foot space houses a basketball court, kid's club, shop, juice bar and full-service spa. Bring it on. 131 Dartmouth St., Boston (617-578-8918). www.equinoxfitness.com.

Boston Gets a Break... Girls may soon be ripping their shirts off: A new female soccer league is in the works, and Beantown has scored a piece of the action. The Boston Breakers, who played from 2000 to 2003, will return as part of a national league founded by the Women's Soccer Initiative and slated to launch in April '08. The Breakers join seven other teams, including franchises in Washington, D.C., Chicago and Los Angeles. Players, ticket info and a venue are TBA. (877-273-2537). www.bostonbreakers.com.

We'll Drink to That... At long last, the Cambridge crowd can booze as easily as the rest of us. Yes, Harvard Square is finally home to a full-service spirits shop. And this is no half-assed hooch stand: Doma Wine & Liquors features a walk-in closet stocked with 300 cases of chilled beers, including hard-to-find Hampshire Ale ($8.99). Also for sale: a variety of Old and New World wines. Need help? Get schooled at Doma's next wine-tasting session, offered Fridays and Saturdays from 5 to 7 pm. Then turn in that thesis and pop the cork on a bottle of champagne ($8–$250), or pick up some scotch for your favorite professor. What better way to grease the grading wheels? Doma Wine & Liquors, 56 JFK St., Cambridge (617-547-0561). www.domaliquors.com. —ML, JB, Jessica Del Balzo and Amanda Knorr ection has its price.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

REJECTED!

So you didn't get into the college of your choice. Let me break it down for you.

The Globe recently ran a story about record-low college acceptance rates across the state, with Northeastern green lighting a mere 39 percent of applicants this year, and Boston College only 27 percent. With all those rejection letters going out, I feel it's time to revamp the traditional curt brushoff with something more detailed, more personal—after all, you took the time to apply to a school, so why shouldn't administrators take the time to explain their reasons for separating you like chaff from the more-qualified wheat? With that, I give you Standard College Rejection Letter, version 2007.

Dear applicant:

We're sorry to say that we've reviewed your application, and there's simply no place for you in the Dingleberry State Class of 2011.

We're sure this is crushing news, since you won't know the joy of a Dingle education, including the thrill of rooting for the top-ranked Wild DingleCats football team or making out with an incredibly hot Dingleberry coed at an awesome party. Of course, we pride ourselves on our academics, but no doubt you also noticed that Playboy just ranked Dingleberry State No. 3 in its annual list of "Easiest Places to Get Laid by Gorgeous Babes," right after University of Southern California and Appalachian State.

But enough about us. Let's talk about you, and why you're getting this skinny rejection letter instead of our Acceptance Packet, which is so thick it's delivered by cargo ship and also includes two tickets to the Super Bowl. The main problem is your across-the-board mediocrity. Your essays were OK, your SAT scores were OK, your grades were OK. You play a couple sports, but not well enough for us to recruit you. You're not even very good-looking. You know how your mom wanted you to take that weird throat-yodeling class? You should've done it, because this year our throat yodeler quota went unfilled.

(By the way, we didn't buy your diversity gambit. One-sixteenth Native American? It's good to know your people still flourish on the buffalo-studded plains of Wayland.)

But there are other reasons for your rejection, beyond your stunning lack of excellence. For instance, we looked at your Myspace page, moron. We know you edited it to remove outright references to your debased teenage lifestyle, but we're not idiots here—your favorite music includes Sublime, Bob Marley and Cypress Hill, and when your page loads it plays Modest Mouse's "Fire Up." Just how much marijuana do yo smoke, kid?

Since you're not Dingleberry materia you should try to look on the positive sid Lots of very successful people come out non–brand-name schools. Did you kno that both Conan O'Brien and Viacom CE Sumner Redstone got their bachelor degre from UMass-Swampscott? Just kiddin They went to Harvard, like most smart pe ple who'll one day be the boss of you.

But chin up, friend. Surely you'll find quality education somewhere. Of cours wherever else you're admitted won't be quit as nice. Perhaps you've heard of the ter "safety school"? Too bad for you, ever school is about as safe as the rhyth method. Wherever you end up, the gir won't be cute, the dorm rooms will have ra the sports teams will lose to local grad schools and the cafeteria won't serve yumm Monte Cristo sandwiches like ours does.

THERE ARE OTHER REASONS FOR YOUR REJECTION: WE LOOKED AT YOUR MYSPACE PAGE.

So let's just fast-forward four years. On you graduate, your alma mater carrie much less weight than you'd think. No mally, nobody even knows where the coworkers went to college, unless someon went to an Ivy League school and fr quently works that fact into conversatio And you know what? Everyone else mak fun of those people and thinks they're tot peckers. So just concentrate on getting somewhere, and over the next four yea you'll party a lot and write a ton of pape and hopefully get some nookie. The you'll graduate and be judged on your a tual competence instead of your scores contrived interests.

Sometimes we suggest ways to get on th waitlist or transfer in after a year, but base on your grades, that's not the kind of ne you can use. So how about this: Meliss Doolittle's parents are away, and we hea she's having a kegger Friday. Since yo Dingleberry application worries are out the way, you've got some celebrating to d Seniors rule! IB

THAT'S RICH

Start Up the Sox

April holds little long-term significance, but it's still pretty damn fun.

April baseball is a lot like the first hour of a new season of 24. The hype reaches epic proportions, the anticipation feels torturous, and when things finally get under way, the action flies at a ridiculous rate. You're introduced to a bunch of new characters and endless potential plotlines. It all seems intense; everything feels super important. But here's the thing about both the first hour of 24 and April baseball: They're pretty much meaningless.

Sure, at the start of the day it seemed like a big deal when Jack chewed through a pair of handcuffs and decapitated a terrorist with a plastic spork, and right now it seems significant that Josh Beckett won his first four starts of the season. But in the big picture? Not so much. At some point down the road, when Jack has to defuse a nuclear bomb while simultaneously fighting off a pack of Communist ninjas or when Beckett has to take the mound for the stretch run in September, what happened in April will mean about as much as something that occurred in 1935.

So while I don't let myself get too worked up over early-season antics, I still enjoy every second of it. Here are a few of my favorite Red Sox–related ramblings from the young '07 season.

The Papi Slide Watch Sliding into a base has never been David Ortiz's forte. And even though it's always fun to watch the big guy belly flop onto first after a pick-off move or wildly fly head-first into third, after witnessing one of his "slides" into second base during the first game against the Yankees last month, I'm officially terrified. If I'm Terry Francona, I tell Papi to abstain from sliding altogether; I'll concede a couple outs. And if I'm me, I immediately close my eyes every time he's involved in a close play and pray that he doesn't snap his leg in half. Take it down a couple speeds, big fella. If I want to see a fat dude struggle around the bases, I'll rewatch Rosie O'Donnell's scenes from A League of Their Own.

Julian Tavarez: Japanese Ambassador Unfortunately, he's overshadowed a bit by having to share a clubhouse with Manny, but Julian Tavarez is absolutely insane. And I, for one, love it. There's something undeniably great about watching a guy pitch and not knowing whether he'll suddenly decide to break a guy's nose off with a fastball. Julian brings that to the table with every appearance. But from a comedy standpoint, there's no better emerging storyline this season than the budding relationship between Tavarez and Dice-K. Someone needs to explain to me what's going on with these guys. Does Julian know Japanese? Does Dice-K understa crazy? NESN could broadcast these inte actions on pay-per-view (and let's be ho est, it's probably already in the works), a I'd pony up the cash in a second.

Mass. Pike Bridge Guitar Guy If you' been to Fenway enough over the past coup of years, you've become familiar with merry band of characters who call the pa home. There's Crazy Jesus Guy and t homeless dude who plays his recorder on t corner of Boylston and Yawkey Way. Then the seven-footer with the wild hair and t toos who walks around taking people's pi tures for Redsox.com and the cotton can vendor who looks like the evil offspring Latrell Sprewell and Wyclef Jean.

But my vote for favorite Fenway perso ality goes to the mustachioed man wh rocks out with his guitar on a milk cra next to the Cask. I don't care if he on knows how to play five or six chords of select five or six songs. And I don't care he plays said five or six chords on an en less loop for hours at a time. This man amazing. I'd hire him to play my wedding

Wild Thing I'm still a little torn Jonathan Papelbon changing up h entrance music. I want my closer to be a rampage when he comes into the game want him to feel like he needs to bre something. I want him to have so mu angst built up inside that he's ready to ta a line drive off the jugular if it means ge ting a save. I felt that with Papelbon's o song, "Bodies." I feel that when Maria Rivera comes out to "Enter Sandman" a when Trevor Hoffman comes out to "He Bells." I don't feel it yet with "Wild Thing The song's a little slow, and the whole thi seems a bit forced and cheesy. But you kn what? Considering the way he's pitch this year, the fact that I'm suggesting change something makes me an idiot. Le just forget I ever said anything. I think I' been spending too much time thinki about Julian Tavarez. IB

BEN FOLDS

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Multi-instrumentalist singer-songwriter Ben Folds, born and raised in North Carolina, graduated from R.J. Reynolds High School in Winston-Salem and attended the University of Miami. Involved in music from an early age, he was a member of several bands and lived in Nashville and New York, working as a songwriter and session musician. In the early 1990s, he formed his break-out band, Ben Folds Five, and his 2001 solo debut hit Billboard's Top 50. Since then he has released numerous critically and commercially successful albums. Known for his mischievous interactions with the audience at live performances, he has also collaborated on projects including an album with actor William Shatner. He routinely sells out venues around the world, and on May 9 he'll be Keith Lockhart's special guest at Opening Night at Pops. Married with two children, he divides his time (when not on tour) between Nashville and his wife's native Australia.

Jonathan Soroff: So are you nervous or excited about Opening Night at Pops?
Ben Folds: I love playing with orchestras. It should be a quick one, though. I'm not playing for very long, which is good, because I generally run out of material and have to play "Brick" five or six times.
JS: Are you going to pull your usual antics?
BF: I don't know. I think with 30 minutes, I'll just get up there and go, "Oh, my God!" and then leave.
JS: Describe your look.
BF: Well, I'm built, of course. I just waxed my chest. I'm with my bassist, Jared, who's pouring baby oil on me at the moment....
JS: Favorite songwriter of all time?
BF: Um... Amanda Palmer [of the Dresden Dolls].
JS: Good Boston answer. So are all record executives weasels?
BF: I haven't really met that many, but I know the one who I make records with, and he is a back-stabbing weasel. But I like him.
JS: How many instruments do you play?
BF: Including the skin flute? Piano, bass, drums... five.
JS: How surreal was it working with William Shatner?
BF: It wasn't, because we're good friends. He's my bud I go to if I have questions about the universe or interplanetary travel. He knows about that stuff. There aren't that many people who are in the entertainment business and are twice my age who I can go to for advice, either, and he's always been there for me. As far as the recording we made, he's so talented and has so much to offer. When he just spoke into the microphone, everyone on the other side in the control room said, "Holy shit!" because he just sounded so good.
JS: Favorite Star Trek character?
BF: Kirk, absolutely. I like Spock, too, but I have to vote for my boy. I liked Uhura, too. She was cool.
JS: Weirdest fan encounter?
BF: There was some knife-wielding dude one time with Jesus tattoos. He was a little upset about my having tried to tackle abortion in a song. What was amazing was that the lyrics weren't that obvious, and the guy didn't look smart enough to read between the lines, but he had the Good Lord all over his arms and was ready to go.

"I THREW MY DRUMS INTO THE LAKE IN THE MIDDLE OF CAMPUS AND GOT A BUS BACK HOME A WEEK LATER."

JS: Best groupie gift?
BF: Not one of the gifts that keeps on giving, I assume?
JS: Well, if it's an STD, so be it.
BF: [Laughs.] No, I've never.... Y'know these days, there's a wave, the youth of America likes to offer to "smoke you up." That term probably came from the '60s, and it's come back now, but I'll get these notes, hand-written, and it looks like a 14-year-old did it, and it'll say, "Dude, you're my favorite. I'm gonna wet my pants. My mom's here. Can we smoke you up?"
JS: Your songs usually tell some kind of story. When you're writing, do you visualize it like a movie in your head?
BF: Sometimes I do, and sometimes I end up going there after starting out with a more literal way of saying something.
JS: Worst moment ever onstage?
BF: I'd say, hands down, it was falling off the stage in Japan. Before I'd even played, I walked onstage and fell five feet on my f---ing head. It damn near knocked me out, and I ended up with a concussion. When I got back onstage, I was bleeding all over my piano. I played the whole set, but I was so dizzy I was about to puke and went to the emergency room. That was embarrassing.
JS: Any song you're embarrassed to have written?
BF: All of them, sometimes, but overall, no. I do get in a mood where I'm like, "God, I like such-and-such music. Why can't mine be like that? Why's it got to be this shit?"
JS: Is Weird Al Yankovic an underappreciated musical genius?
BF: I don't think he's underappreciated, because he's huge. He's got absolute integrity. And if you go to one of his concerts, it's packed. It's not an unhip crowd, either. Everybody digs what he does, and in a way, he just keeps getting better.
JS: Top three songs in heavy rotation on your iPod?
BF: Weird Al's polka medley, his version of "Fat" [the take-off on Michael Jackson's "Bad"] and "Amish Paradise." That's pretty much all I listen to.
JS: True or false: You once threw your drum kit into a lake?
BF: True. It was a cheap set. I had just officially lost my scholarship—I had a full-tuition scholarship to the University of Miami to play music. I had a broken hand and stitches all in my face and was still experiencing my first hangover, so I threw my drums into the lake in the middle of campus and got a bus back home a week later.
JS: Any thoughts on the proliferation of soulful male singer-songwriters?
BF: They haven't sprayed for those this year? They really need to.
JS: Is there anyone whose career you feel you really launched?
BF: Kelly Clarkson, probably.
JS: Does being a musician get you laid?
BF: I think being a crew member probab gets you laid more. I may be wrong, b most musicians are either too busy or afra they're gonna end up on the Internet, b the crew members don't care.
JS: Describe your fan base.
BF: Highly enlightened, intelligent Indon sian women over 45 with prominent for heads. And mail-order brides from Russia.
JS: You're famous for doing improv onstage. Do you like that more than playing a predete mined set?
BF: Not really, but what happens is that I' the slowest songwriter I know. At the san time, I'm really quick at coming up with t ideas, so it means that I'm either lazy or fea ful of finishing songs. So at a show, I wa onstage about to throw up thinking abo how I have to keep playing my same shit songs because I haven't written anythi new. It makes you want to gag. And I thir that motivates me while onstage to make anything that will make it different.
JS: Explain the concept of a "brown note."
BF: It's pretty scientific, military top-secr type of stuff, but it involves the effects of ce tain frequencies on the bowels. Fourtee hertz has proven, when played through large enough driver, at a high enough vo ume, to make people shit their pants. We tried it at concerts, and people yell out, just shit my pants!" But to the best of m knowledge, it's an urban myth.
JS: Your most autobiographical song?
BF: Well, it's actually not a song I wrot Dr. Dre did, and it's called "Bitches Ain Shit." He said it all for me.
JS: One song you'd never, ever do a cover of BF: The Agnus Dei movement of Faure Requiem. I don't think I could pull it off don't have the boys choir or the pipe organ
JS: Oddest thing you've ever used as a musical instrument?
BF: I recorded a song one time with va uum cleaners.
JS: Last question: Will you write a song about me?
BF: For 300 bucks, sure. But it'll probab take me a while. IB

Boston's Beloved Bartenders

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

OF ALL THE PROFESSIONALS we rely on every day—secretary, hairstylist, broker, doctor, dentist, shrink—there's none we'd miss more if they were to throw in the towel than our favorite bartender. Not only do they provide many of the same services as the aforementioned, they do it with an élan you just don't find elsewhere. Not to mention that they also supply us with a chemical fix. ■ But to view them merely as legally sanctioned drug pushers is to miss the point entirely. Bartenders—especially good ones—offer friendship of an unquestioning, nonjudgmental variety that you're likely to find only in acquaintances of very long standing, small children or labrador retrievers. That makes them aces in our book. ■ Every year we ask readers to nominate their favorite bartenders, yielding an avalanche of responses. In addition to tallying these votes, we take into consideration our own experience imbibing around town. Because certain names appear year after year, we include a sidebar of "Most Valuable Bartenders"—the legendary practitioners of this honorable art. In hopes you'll keep this issue around as a bar guide, we also include a signature drink recipe from each of this year's winners, to help you re-create their magic at home. Short of us picking up your tab, what more could you want? ■ And so, with great pride we present Boston's Beloved Bartenders, Class of 2007. Please read responsibly.

ANDREW VISCONTI AND TARA O'RIORDAN

THE ASHMONT GRILL (TUE.–SAT.)

555 TALBOT AVE., DORCHESTER (617-825-4300)

Born and raised: Andrew: Born in Medford, raised in Reading
Tara: Born in Boston, raised in Dorchester

How long have you been bartending, and where else?
Andrew: "I've been bartending for over 20 years: at Seasons at the Bostonian Hotel and Biba; as the bar manager at Jae's in Inman Squa I opened the Summer Shack in Copley Square for Jasper White; and worked at Rialto in the Charles Hotel for Jody Adams. Before the Ashmont Grill, I was working at Piattini." Tara: "I've been making drinks for 10 years or so, and I've worked at many an Irish pub (although those days are blurry). I've worked in a yacht club and at a small inn in Northampton, and I've done a few private parties. In oth words, if there are drinks to be made, I'll make them."

Is bartending your only job? Tara: "I work part-time at a Boston nonprofit, helping in the fundraising office. It feels good to be connected to other parts of the city."

Hobbies/other pursuits: Andrew: "I'd like to say I can sing, but I can I'd like to say I can paint, but I can't. I'd like to say I can act, but nobo has offered me a part. So basically just enjoying friends and family an traveling." Tara: "I do all the music for the Grill. I'm obsessed with m iTunes and making playlists, and I dabble in acting. I have a script in the works, based on a bar. The rest is a secret, but I guarantee it'll mal you laugh right off your stool."

Describe your regulars: Andrew: "Our regulars are quite a mixed cre of gays, straights and some that we aren't quite sure about yet." Tara: "We've got all kinds of regulars, and a few irregulars! Young, old, married, single, Dot-rats and people new to the neighborhood—we don't discriminate."

Describe your style: Andrew: "Our bartending skills are excellent. W give our clients the service we'd like to have. I'm a little flirtatious and bit of a joker." Tara: "I make delicious drinks fast. I'm a joker and somewhat flirtatious, depending upon whom you ask. I'm here to give everyone whatever they need as soon as they walk through that door. my style changes. I'm like a chameleon, but much cuter."

Describe your bar: Andrew: "A great neighborhood bar and restaurant that's welcoming to all who enter." Tara: "Warm, cozy, clean and comfortable. There's room for everyone, and if not, we make room. There's also lots of banter between Andrew, me and our guests. Peopl call it 'the show.'"

Why do you think your regulars return to your bar again and again?
Andrew: "Great food, great drink, lots of laughs and, of course, our beauty!" Tara: "People enjoy the dynamic between Andrew and me. It all about the show. We play off each other really well, and we're damn funny. And the more money we make, the funnier we get."

Your trademark: Andrew: "The phrase I use most often is: 'I'm a beauty Don't aggravate me!'" Tara: "Most of the phrases I use can't be printed but they're all in good fun. I also like to use holiday-themed pens: fluff bunnies for Easter, love birds for Valentine's Day. People laugh when I hand them pens that light up. Then I tell them that they'll be electrocuted if they're not generous."

Signature drink:

Andrew: The Ruby Slipper

Combine 2½ oz. Absolut Ruby Red Vodka and 1½ oz. red grapefrui juice, and shake, shake, shake. Garnish your martini glass with a sugared rim.

Tara: The O'Mojito

Combine muddled orange, fresh lime juice, sugar and mint with 2 oz. of Bacardi Orange. Top with soda and a splash of fresh OJ, and garnish with a lime.

SUZIE MELLO
UNDERBAR (SAT.)
275 TREMONT ST., BOSTON (617-292-0080)

Born and raised: Peabody

How long have you been bartending, and where else? "Six and a half years. Before Underbar, I worked at LaBoom and Pravda."

Is bartending your only job? "No, bartending is a hobby I get paid for! I also work at Beaucage Salon on Newbury Street as a stylist."

Hobbies/other pursuits: "I have little time these days for other hobbies, but I enjoy anything that keeps me active. I love to go rollerblading along the Charles and walking (aka shopping) on Newbury Street on nice days. If it's cold out, you'll find me working out, playing pool or bowling."

Describe your style: "Flirty with some class, although there are nights when I'm just plain silly behind the bar."

Describe your bar: "Underbar is an upscale nightclub. The vibe's hot, since the majority of the clientele is European and they party like rock stars. They even put up with the Johnny Walker Black shots I serve them."

Why do you think your regulars return to your bar again and again? "I think it's just comfortable to have a familiar face behind the bar, and it doesn't hurt that I'm a talker."

Your trademark: "You come to my bar, you're always guaranteed to be greeted with a big smile. I just can't get rid of it."

Signature drink: Blueberry Lemonade
Equal parts Stoli Blueberi, Grey Goose Citron and sour mix, a fresh-squeezed lemon and a splash of Blue Curaçao. Shake very well and serve on the rocks with a lemon wedge. For anyone with a sweet tooth, you can sugar the rim, too.

SARAH CHO
BRICCO (MON.–THU.)
241 HANOVER ST., BOSTON (617-248-6800)
GYPSY BAR (FRI. AND SAT.)
116 BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON (617-482-7799)

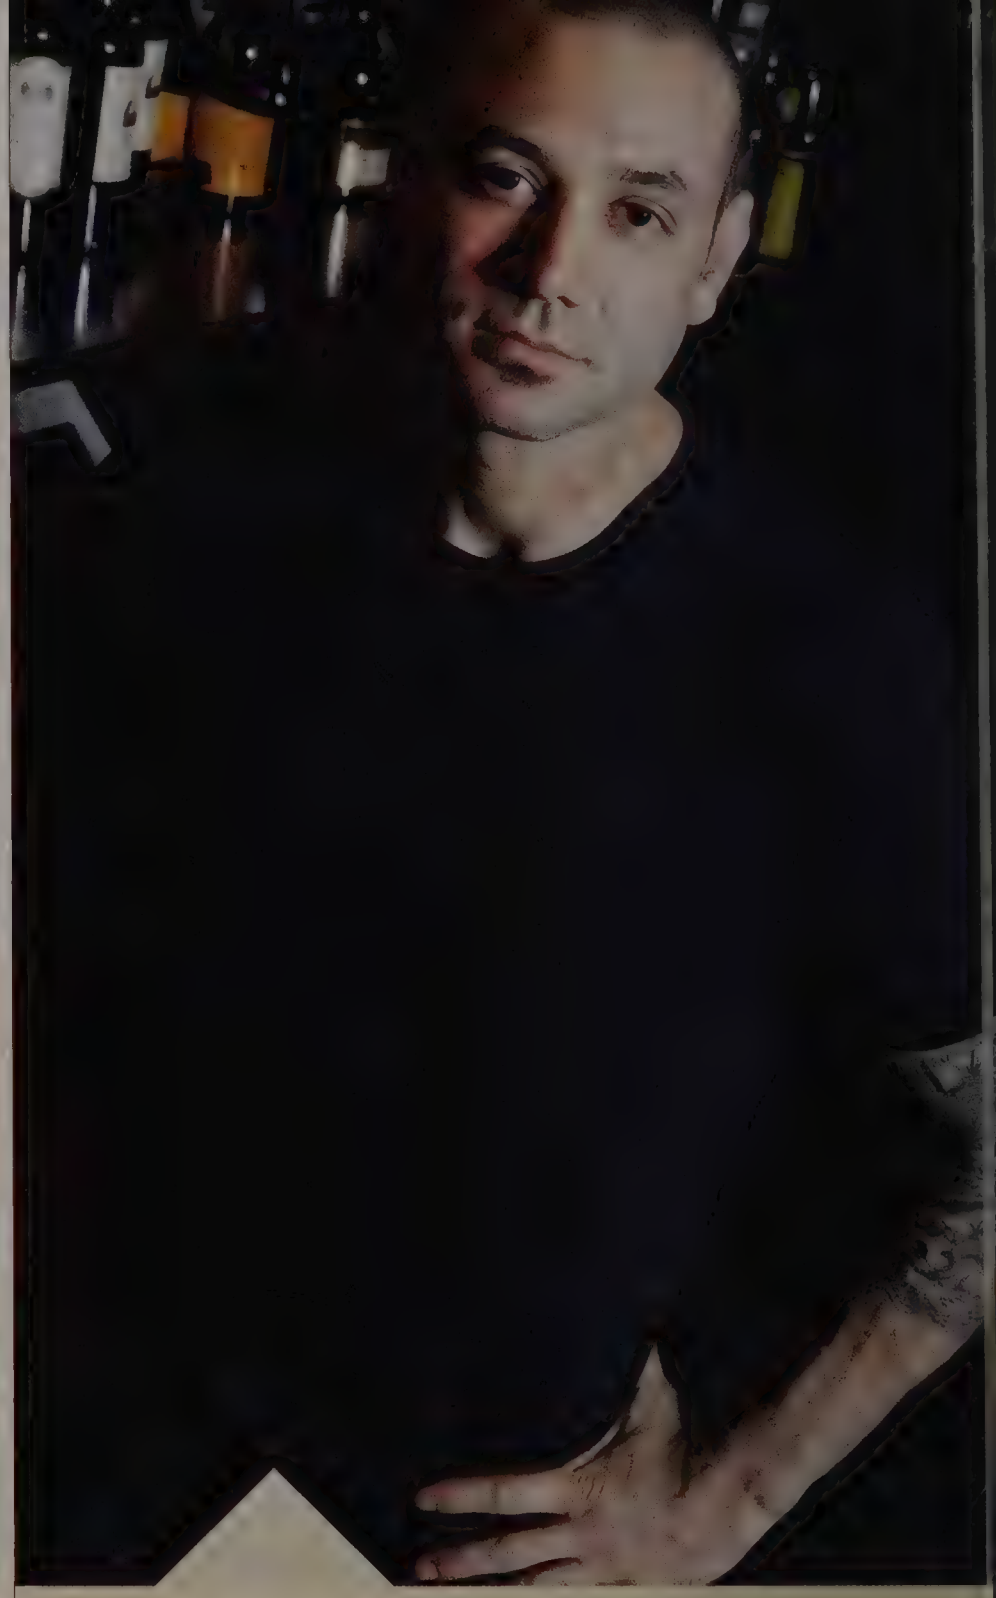
Born and raised: Sanford, Maine

How long have you been bartending, and where else? "About three years. I've been around a bit: started off at News, then worked at Gypsy Bar, Umbria and the Cask'n Flagon."

Hobbies/other pursuits: "I don't really consider myself to be artistic, but one time I did take a modern dance class where I had to roam across the floor like a hungry mountain lion."

Describe your regulars: "Most of them are middle-aged businessmen in nice suits who like to drink a lot."

Describe your style: "Fun, fast and very friendly. I smile a lot, always look presentable and am careful to throw a little love into every drink."



Describe your bar: "Gypsy Bar is high-energy and fast-paced. The crowd is young and trendy. It's always packed, and the bartenders I work with are all absolutely gorgeous! The bar at Bricco is smaller and cozy, and it draws a good mix of an afterwork crowd, tourists and neighborhood people."

Why do you think your regulars return to your bar again and again? "Well, let's hope it's because I dazzle them with my wit and charm, but honestly, I have no idea. Probably because I'm good at getting them drunk."

Your trademark: "One time a guy at Gypsy told me I always catch his attention because I have really big hair for an Asian girl. I don't know what that means, but I guess it could be a distinguishing characteristic."

Signature drink: Candy-Apple Martini
1 oz. Stoli Vanil, 1 oz. Sour Apple Pucker, 1 oz. Butterscotch Schnapps, 1 oz. cranberry juice. Pour all ingredients into a cocktail shaker half-filled with ice. Shake well and strain into a chilled martini glass. Garnish with a cherry or apple slice.

(617-269-0990)

Born and raised: Belfast, Northern Ireland ("It's really a beautiful and very fun city.")

How long have you been bartending, and where else? "I worked at a little bar in Belfast during the summer while at college. Our legal drinking age is 18, so I spent more time in bars not working. I came to the U.S. in 1999 and started working at the BBG, where I've been stuck ever since."

Hobbies/other pursuits: "I'm a huge music fan and love the start of the summer, when all the big-name bands start visiting Boston. And while I'm a drama queen, I have no professional training."

Describe your regulars: "A truly mixed bag. I love the BBG because I get to know our regulars."

Describe your style: "Wiseass!"

Describe your bar: "A funky neighborhood hangout, low-key and relaxed. It's also a great place to watch the Sox. The eclectic and eccentric staff crack me up."

Why do you think your regulars return to your bar again and again? "It's gotta be the staff. Customers know every bartender for their idiosyncrasies and idiotic antics."

Your trademark: "The phrase I use most is 'big d---s and dollar bills.' I just retired my ripped jeans (long overdue, I know). As for a physical characteristic, I try to smile—most of the time."

Signature drink:
Orlagh's Famous Bloody Mary
"We serve great Bloodys; it's all in the mix. We use the works and mix Absolut Citron and Peppar with a lotta love. I also love Car Bombs, being from Belfast and all that."

ADAM KNOX
GRILL 23 & BAR (MON.–THU., SAT.)
161 BERKELEY ST., BOSTON
(617-542-2255)

Born and raised: Born in Riverside, Calif., raised in Taunton

How long have you been bartending, and where else? "Ten years. I started at the Elephant Walk, worked on Nantucket for a summer and then at Fleming's before coming to Grill 23."

Hobbies/other pursuits: "I have 10 years of training in martial arts. I'm a black belt in tae kwon-do and a member of Brazilian Top Team Boston (Brazilian jiu jitsu)."

Describe your regulars: "The range is as diverse as the city of Boston, with one constant: They're all good people."

Describe your style: "Fast and professional."

Describe your bar: "A modern approach to the classic, old-school steakhouse."

Why do you think your regulars return to your bar again and again? "In my opinion, we have the best staff and the best steaks in the city."

Your trademark: "I only have two speeds—out-of-control and off."

Signature drink:
Premium Vodka Martini
"It's simple, strong and makes everything better. I use premium vodka and no vermouth, superchilled, served straight-up, garnished with olives or a twist."

BETH ANN HOYOS

TEMPLE BAR (THU. AND SAT.)

1688 MASS. AVE., CAMBRIDGE (617-547-5055)

Born and raised: Ridgewood, NJ ("I'm a Jersey girl all the way!")

How long have you been bartending, and where else? "I've been bartending for 10 years, and I've worked at John Harvard's Brew House and on Martha's Vineyard."

Is bartending your only job?: "I'm a very busy girl these days. I manage a clothing store in Cambridge and am also the co-owner of the Velvet Fly boutique that'll be opening in June on Hanover Street in the North End. It'll be a mix of modern and vintage clothing."

Hobbies/other pursuits: "Big loves: my husband, Mark, my dog, Hemi, Kundalini yoga, ballet (I used to dance professionally), camping and hiking."

Describe your regulars: "Neighborhood professionals looking to relax after a long day at work."

Describe your style: "I'm sassy. I like to make sure people have a good time and get great service. I guess you could call it 'Surly with a smile!'"

Describe your bar: "A neighborhood American bistro with great food and drinks."

Why do you think your regulars return to your bar again and again? "Friendly atmosphere, great food and service to match. Oh, and did I mention I have a heavy hand?"

Your trademark: "Overall, I like to have fun. Sometimes I dance, crack jokes or make funny faces to keep the night flowing."

Signature drink: Pomegranate Martini
Equal parts Pama Liqueur and Absolut Ruby Red, with a splash of cranberry juice and sour mix. Shake on ice and serve straight-up in a martini glass.

Born and raised: Born in Pasadena, Calif., raised in Bogotá, Colombia.

How long have you been bartending, and where else? "I've been bartending eight years and worked at a bunch of amazing places: Bricco, 33 Restaurant, Mantra, Embassy, Modern, Pravda, Legal Sea Food, Tonic…"

Hobbies/other pursuits: "I like rock climbing and playing squash, and I really like rollerblading and riding my bike when the weather is good."

Describe your regulars: "They come in with a smile. They love to have a good time, and they're very respectful—not demanding at all. If it's crazy busy, they're patient and never yell, which is why they get their drinks first. They also say 'please' and 'thank you' and tip generously."

Describe your style: "Somewhat artistic. I like to move fast and smooth and throw things in the air in the process. It makes the job fun for me and entertaining for my guests. When it's not too busy, I like to talk to the people at the bar and learn about them."

Why do you think your regulars return to your bar again and again? "Great service, and the entertainment factor. I remember their drinks—and how they like them. I keep a clean bar, don't make them wait and genuinely care about them."

Your trademark: "Well, a game I like to play with patrons is One for You, One for Me. (Just kidding.)"

Signature drink: Peachy
Two parts Stoli Peach and one part Beefeater Wet, then fill with ginger ale and cranberry juice. Squeeze two limes and serve on the rocks or straight-up.

EXCELSIOR (TUE., THU.–SAT.)
272 BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON
(617-426-5684)

Born and raised: Central Mass.

How long have you been bartending, and where else? "Seven years, everywhere from Il Panino and Whiskey Park to clubs like Venu, Rumor, Aria and Embassy."

Hobbies/other pursuits: "Reading, crossword puzzles and playing with my dogs, but I swear I'm not as geeky as that sounds!"

Describe your regulars: "Locals who live in the area. Our regulars are very regular; I joke that they know more about what's going on my life than my friends and family.

Describe your style: "Laid-back. My guests are there to have a good time, and they can't do that if the bartender is in a bad mood or going crazy."

Describe your bar: "Low-key, great music, great atmosphere."

Why do you think your regulars return to your bar again and again? "Comfort. There are only a few bartenders, and all of our regulars know us well. They know that when they come in, whoever's behind the bar will know their name, their drink and how they like to be treated."

Signature drinks:
Jack and Jill
Equal parts Jack Daniels and Amaretto, chilled and served straight-up as a shot.
Geisha Girl
2 oz. Cointreau, shaken hard with cucumber, mint, basil and citrus fruit. Pour into a rocks glass and top with sake.

Alcoholic Alchemy

Clio's cocktail chemists put a cool spin on knocking back a cold one

When Ken Oringer first fell in love with liquid nitrogen, it seemed like every other item on his menu involved something being frozen at the table. (Before your very eyes!) But even the most avant of palates can endure only so many flash-frosted vials of tomato-soup sorbet. Like the best relationships, what started out as volatile chemical attraction has relaxed into a more sophisticated union. This spring, the coolest cocktail in the city—physically and figuratively—is Clio's Smoking Ginger ($17), a martini that uses liquid nitrogen to ingenious advantage. A heady mixture of exotic citrus, the beverage combines Hangar One Buddha's Hand Vodka (Buddha's hand is a lemony, "finger"-shaped fruit) with yuzu juice (a sour citrus fruit), shiso (a minty, piney herb) and ginger-lemon tea. The ingenious part: Instead of shaking the cocktail with ice—which waters down the drink as it melts—the bartender adds a dollop of liquid nitrogen to the glass. In seconds, the lemony libation freezes into a refreshing, multilayered cocktail slush: part liquid, part sorbet. And without diluting the complex flavor—or the alcohol content. Clio, 370 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-267-1607). —Jolyon Helterman

ERIKA CASANOVA
FELT (FRI. AND SAT.)
533 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON (617-350-5555)

Born and raised: "I grew up in Chelmsford, about 40 minutes north of Boston."

How long have you been bartending, and where else? "I've been bartending at Felt for two years. I started as a waitress. The owner must've seen me drop too many trays, because after six months they put me behind the bar."

Is bartending your only job? "I'm about to graduate from Emerson with a broadcast journalism major and a philosophy minor. I'm also a professional badass, but that's not a paid position."

Hobbies/other pursuits: "I like to go to the range and bust some balls every now and then, but I'm pretty much up for anything. Now that the second season of The Hills is over, I'll have a lot more free time on my hands."

Describe your regulars: "Are you referring to my fan club? Because that's why I do what I do. It's all for the fans, baby."

Describe your style: "I'm definitely a smart-ass. Customers dig it."

Why do you think your regulars return to your bar again and again? "Because I make drinks like nobody's business. I've got the fastest shakers in the city."

Your trademark: "I've been known to yell "Holla!" and do the Running Man behind the bar. When that old-school hip-hop comes on, I just can't help myself."

Signature drink: Capeesh (or Capisce)
Two parts Captain Morgan Rum, one part Peach Schnapps, a splash of pineapple juice and a splash of cranberry juice. It can be served as a shot or a drink.
[Full disclosure: She's also an IMPROPER intern!]

CIARA LAVERY
THE BLACK ROSE
(TUE., WED., FRI.–SUN.)
160 STATE ST., BOSTON
(617-742-2286)

Born and raised:
Armagh, Ireland

How long have you been bartending, and where else? "I've tended bar exclusively at the Black Rose since 1999."

Hobbies/other pursuits: "Reading fiction. My favorite author is James Patterson. And, of course, shopping for myself."

Describe your regulars: "They come from all walks of life. Many live locally, while others make a point of visiting whenever they're in town. The common thread is that they're all interested in some good banter, good food and a great pint."

Describe your style: "Personable, attentive and friendly."

Describe your bar: "An old-style Irish bar, with goo pub food, a lively atmosphere, live Irish music nightly and a mixed crowd.

Why do you think your regulars return to your bar again and again? "They know what they're going to get, and they always get it."

Your trademark: "I always ask my customers to eat while they drink, because then they can stay much longer."

Signature drink:
"Many people are turned off by the idea of whiskey and orange juice, but the combination is delicious."
The Irish Sunrise
Michael Collins Irish Whiskey, orange juice and a splash of grenadine served on the rocks.

ANDY WONG

THE KELLS (SAT. AND SUN.)

51 BRIGHTON AVE., ALLSTON (617-782-9082)

Born and raised: Brookline

How long have you been bartending, and where else? "Come August, it'll be nine years I've been bartending at the Kells."

Hobbies/other pursuits: "Running marathons and bike tours."

Describe your regulars: "A college crowd, 20-somethings and young professional types."

Bartending style: "For the most part old-fashioned, but that turns into a more fast-paced style real quick when you're dealing with the crowds we have rushing to the bar every night."

Describe your bar: "A good place to go if you're single but looking. It's a multiplex venue with four bars, a dining room and two large dance floors. The DJs play a mix of hip-hop, R&B, reggae and old-school."

Why do you think your regulars return to your bar again and again? "It's one of Boston's most popular hot spots. The proof is in the crowd lined up at the door and stretching well beyond the next few blocks."

Your trademark: "You don't really see many Asian bartenders around these parts, so I'd say that being an Asian bartender in an Irish pub would be my distinguishing characteristic."

Signature drink: The Yellow Fever

1 oz. Absolut Citron, 1 oz. Bacardi Limón, 4 oz. lemonade. Fill a highball glass with ice. Add the Absolut and Bacardi, then fill with lemonade. Shake and serve with a wedge of lemon.

Free to Chew

Shelling out 12 bucks a drink hurts a whole lot less when the shelled whole cashews cost nothing. Here's the city's best bar grub—gratis.

SOME LIKE IT HOT

Any snack mix worth its salt contains a few nutty offerings—peanuts, cashews, those mealy ones nobody actually knows the name of. What separates the Last Hurrah's bowl from the rest is heat. Amble up to the mahogany bar, order your Plymouth martini, and out comes a bowl of salty nuts, still toasty from the kitchen. There's enough variety—almonds, pistachios, macadamias and more—to keep Best in Show's Harlan Pepper in nut-naming nirvana. Last Hurrah, Omni Parker House Hotel, 60 School St., Boston (617-227-8600).

CHIPS AHOY

There's nothing like a second Ketel-and-soda to get carb-fearing, Ruffles-shunning sophisticates scraping chip crumbs from the bottom of the bowl. And when it's the garlicky house-made variety at Grill 23, resolve doesn't last but a few sips. Prefer multicolored gluttony? Meritage riffs on the theme with root-veggie offerings—potato, sweet potato, lotus root and taro. Trust us: No one can eat just four. Grill 23 & Bar, 161 Berkeley St., Boston (617-542-2255); Meritage, Boston Harbor Hotel, 70 Rowes Wharf, Boston (617-439-3995).

CULT FAVE

The hard-boiled eggs at the B-Side enjoy a fierce following among the city's foodie elite. Is it the way the chef gently simmers the elliptical orbs in artisanal water to tease out the yolk's creaminess, leaving the white taut-yet-tender-as-a-rose-petal? Nah—they're just your basic hard-boiled eggs. But by the sixth Sidecar, you'll be misty-eyed at their minimalist perfection. B-Side Lounge, 92 Hampshire St., Cambridge (617-354-0766).

ON A TEAR

If you've been jonesing for your fix of recycled-rhubarb vegetarian-jerky product, breathe easy. Petit Robert on Columbus has your poison. It all started when chef-owner Jacky Robert had a ton of spent rhubarb fibers on hand (after squeezing the juice into a cocktail called the Dirty French Chef). He added high-octane flavors like sesame oil, soy sauce, liquid smoke, cayenne and honey, dried them, then cut them into bite-sized pieces appropriately named Jacky's Jerky. The result is chewy, smoky, salty and sweet, and you'll hardly miss the meat. Petit Robert Bistro, 480 Columbus Ave., Boston (617-867-0600).

THE JACKPOT

It's easy to spot the regulars at Brasserie Jo's polished-wood bar: They're the ones tucking into a smorgasbord of savory snacks. Feel left out? You have but to ask, and the amiable barman will set you up with your own personal buffet. Cold hard-boiled eggs, carrots in olive oil, lemon and parsley, and herb-marinated olives provide a cooling contrast to the demi-baguette served piping-hot in its paper sleeve with a shatteringly crisp crust giving way to a soft, cottony interior. The grand finale? A cracker-thin tarte flambée topped with the likes of Gruyère, red pepper and sweet caramelized onions. Brasserie Jo, Colonnade Hotel, 120 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-425-3240).

ONE NIGHT ONLY

Sometimes, getting free eats is all about hitting the bar on the right night. Fridays at Aujourd'hui, a $10 investment in a glass of sparkling wine earns you the privilege of partaking in posh passed hors d'oeuvres. The nibbles change weekly—past offerings include prosciutto-wrapped asparagus and seafood sausage with yuzu aïoli—except for two standards: warm gougères (puff pastry filled with Gruyère) and truffled popcorn. On Sundays, Sasso hosts Industry Night, where restaurant insiders congregate while sampling morsels the chef might add to a future menu. But the rest of us are invited, too. Weigh in on the likes of lump-crabmeat arancini and shortbread with eggplant tapenade, and—with a little perseverance—you can influence what Sasso serves this fall. Aujourd'hui, Four Seasons Hotel, 200 Boylston St., Boston (617-351-2037). Fri., 5:30-7 pm; Sasso Restaurant & Bar, 116 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-247-2400). Sun., 11 pm-1 am. —Jolyon Helterman

JAMES DORSEY
SORELLINA (TUE., WED., SAT. AND SUN.)
1 HUNTINGTON AVE., BOSTON (617-412-4600)

Born and raised: "I was born in Minneapolis, stayed until I was nine, moved to Sylvania, Ohio, and then ended up in Easton, Mass., for high school."

How long have you been bartending, and where else? "I've been bartending for seven years now. I've worked at UpStairs on the Square and No. 9 Park before here."

Hobbies/other pursuits: "I read a lot and try to compensate for my lack of artistic talent by supporting my artistic friends. I love to go out and have a good time."

Describe your regulars: "They're people who aren't afraid of a good conversation. They're all personality types and backgrounds, but have the ability to get beyond that and try to connect with just about anyone who's willing to enjoy a night on the town."

Describe your style: "Everyone who comes to the bar is there for a different experience. Some are there for a proper cocktail, some for a decent meal, some to just relax and let an experience come to them. I try to accommodate anyone and everyone at the bar with what they need, so I guess my style is situational. I can be laid-back, boisterous, proper or improper, depending on what kind of feedback I get from the customer."

Describe your bar: "In a word: beautiful. Its modern style is toned down by huge windows and organic accents. The bar serves a great assortment of cocktails and a great wine selection. It's right on the Back Bay/South End border, so the mix of people are usually locals, with a few brave souls who live in the 'burbs."

Why do you think your regulars return to your bar again and again? "They all come for different reasons. Some want a consistent drink, and others want something new all the time. I try my best to provide both."

Your trademark: "I'm basically a Midwesterner trapped in a Northeast town, so I'm very polite and sincere. What you see is what you get."

Signature drink: The Scofflaw
Three parts rye whiskey, one part dry vermouth, one part fresh lemon juice, one part real grenadine and two dashes of Angostura bitters. Add all of the ingredients into a pint glass filled with ice. Roll the contents in a Boston shaker (don't shake!) until well-mixed, strain and serve straight-up.

ARI BARBANELL
CHEZ HENRI (SAT.–MON.)
1 SHEPARD ST., CAMBRIDGE
(617-354-8980)

Born and raised: "The small, desolate, god-forsaken town of Los Angeles, Calif. Yuck."

How long have you been bartending, and where else? "I've been bartending for 10 years. I started in college, before I could legally drink. I lived and worked in New York City for many years. I helped to open the fancy-pants Gansevoort Hotel Bar, but too many Jessica Simpson sightings drove me to Boston."

Is bartending your only job? "I'm currently in grad school at BU for a master's in arts administration. I also intern at the American Repertory Theatre in the fundraising department. Working for free has never been so pleasant."

Hobbies/other pursuits: "I'm a theater lover. I don't do much acting anymore; I find it more fun to be behind the scenes, fundraising and making it possible for people to see good theater. I'm also in a Gypsy rock band called Jingo Jango. We do homeland-style versions of classic tunes by artists such as Britney Spears. We're recording in a barn this summer."

Describe your regulars: "Wonderful Cambridge folk who invite me to help them try new drinks and meals and music, and who encourage me to do my goofy dance routines while I shake, pour, serve or drop off cocktails. They also kindly forgive my potty mouth."

Describe your style: "I think my style is sassy librarian with a twist of Short Bus."

Describe your bar: "Intimate, great music (because I make the playlists), with a friendly and fun staff. It's great for a date or just for a hang, especially if you're in the mood for tropical cocktails, a delicious Cuban-style menu that you can only get in the bar area, or bistro fare you can eat in the bar, too."

Why do you think your regulars return to your bar again and again? "I hope that I make them laugh. I like making them great drinks and helping them choose the best eats, but I think a night at the bar should be about enjoying yourself silly. I like to connect people, introduce them to other regulars and have a communal atmosphere at my bar."

Your trademark: "I love making playlists for my shifts, introducing customers to new music and getting my Chez Henri groove on. While some may mistake my moves for a seizure, dancing my way through moments of high-volume drink-making is probably my most noticeable trademark."

Signature drink:
"I have a wonderful regular who brings me fresh citrus fruit from his home in Florida whenever he gets down there, and we invented this drink."
The Pink Sock:
The juice of half a pink grapefruit (Ruby Red if there's no fresh citrus delivery from a kind customer), 1 oz. Plymouth Gin and ½ oz. Cointreau. Shake over ice, strain into a cocktail glass with a sugared rim and float a layer of sparkling cava on top. Garnish with a twist of lemon.

How long have you been bartending, and where else? "About 13 years: Ned Devine's for three years, and at the Rack until it closed. In college, I worked at Players Sports Bar and Nightclub in State College, Pa."

Hobbies/other pursuits: "Ice hockey, sports and sculpture."

Describe your regulars: "We're unique, because we offer something for everyone—a restaurant, a lounge and a club. Same goes for our regulars, who range anywhere from a 22-year-old college grad to the first-time-in-Boston tourist, to the stockbroker who just needs a shot very badly."

Describe your style: "Old-school, just like Frank the Tank."

Describe your bar: "Aside from what I already said, we offer live bands and DJs on weekends in the club (Parris), and guitarists performing Thursday through Saturday at Ned's."

Why do you think your regulars return to your bar again and again? "The generally relaxed atmosphere and the great music, drinks and service. The beautiful female clientele doesn't hurt, either."

Your trademark: "I've been known to dance behind the bar at times. Let me tell you: A 5'10" hockey goalie dancing behind the bar isn't the prettiest sight you've ever seen."

Signature drink: Female of the New Millenium Shot
Two parts Malibu, one part Apple Pucker, a splash of cranberry juice and sour mix. Top with Sprite.

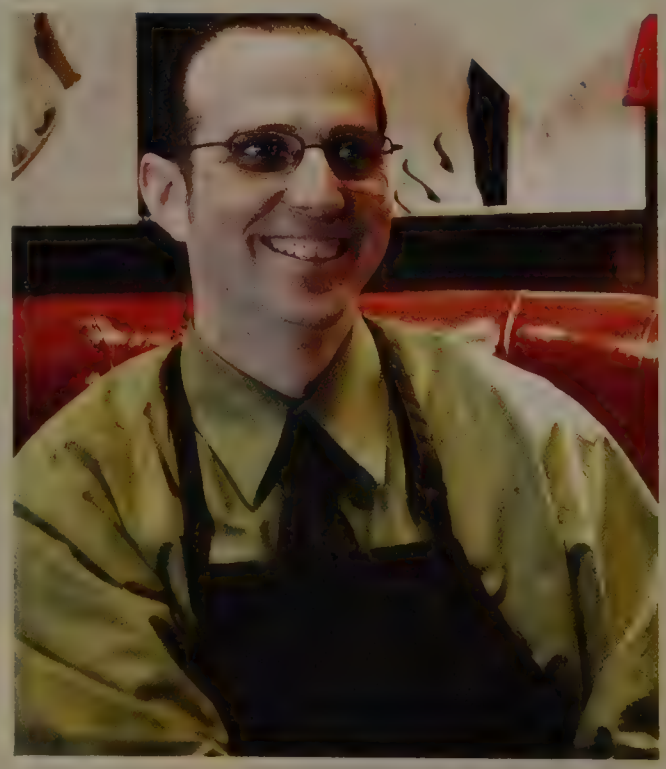
JACKSON CANNON
EASTERN STANDARD (VARYING SCHEDULE)
528 COMM. AVE., BOSTON (617-532-9100)

Born and raised: "Born in San Jose, Calif., and raised in the Washington, D.C., area. As the longest-tenured reporter assigned to cover Ronald Reagan, my father kept the family on the move, from Southern California to Sacramento to the nation's capital."

How long have you been bartending, and where else? "Long enough to have formed the Jack Rose Society with three of my esteemed colleagues. We're dedicated to preserving the legacy of the art of the American cocktail."

Hobbies/other pursuits: "I love to travel, and my wanderlust has been channeled into the passion of a true craftsman. For first-hand knowledge, I've gone to Turin, Italy, to study vermouth, and Fe Camp, France, in search of the monks of Benedictine."

Describe your regulars: "People who appreciate quality."



Describe your style: "Old-school hospitality meets inventive mixology. I'm one-part performer, one-part philosopher and a healthy splash of cocktail historian."

Describe your bar: "A spacious yet inviting, grand brasserie. We were named Boston magazine's Best Restaurant Bar in 2006 and we were No. 3 on USA Today's Top 10 Hotel Bars."

Why do you think your regulars return to your bar again and again? "The service."

Your trademark: "The phrase you'll hear me say most often is, 'Welcome, friends!'"

Signature drink: Le Grande Flip
One egg, 1 oz. Laird's Applejack, ½ oz. Diabolique, ½ oz. Benedictine, ½ oz. orange juice and a spoonful of sugar. Shake well over ice, strain into a martini glass and garnish with an orange twist.

GIANNA PASSACANTILLI
PIZZERIA REGINA NORTH END (TUE. AND SAT.)
11½ THACHER ST., BOSTON (617-227-0765)

Born and raised: Medford

How long have you been bartending, and where else? "I've worked at the Regina for the past three years. It's been in my family since 1946, so it was a rite of passage for me to work there."

Hobbies/other pursuits: "I put my family before all else. They've inspired me to be a strong and hard-working individual. I enjoy working out and running with my two dogs, Bruno and Bella. I'm also into fashion."

Describe your regulars: "They range from neighborhood locals to visitors from across the country. My regulars treat me very well, and they make the job fun and entertaining."

Describe your style: "I don't have one specific style. I want each guest to feel comfortable, almost like they're eating in their own homes, with their own crazy families. As the youngest bartender, I play the little sister."

Describe your bar: "It's the original bar from 1926, which only has six stools and you can only drink if you're going to order a pizza. Over the years, the faces it's seen and the stories it's heard have contributed to its uniqueness and charm."

Why do you think your regulars return to your bar again and again? "People are drawn to the Regina because it's one of the oldest and most respected businesses in the North End. The Regina is a product of hard-working people who've dedicated their lives to making others happy through excellent service and homemade recipes. People come for the pizza at first, but they return again and again because of the people who make it all possible."

Your trademark: "I have a fun and cute but sassy demeanor, and I use quick, witty one-liners to keep my guests on their toes!"

Signature drink: Chilly Chianti
"We're the only Italian restaurant that serves a cold red wine. It's kind of our signature."

Is bartending your only job? "I'm also a tour consultant for EF educational tours in Cambridge. I love teachers who travel with their students."

Hobbies/other pursuits: "Rollerblading through the Southwest Corridor park, trying not to hit any tennis balls over the fence, and I play a good game of darts."

Describe your regulars: "An incredibly eclectic crowd who let me experiment on them with any of my latest creations."

Describe your style: "I've been known to use a little flash with some bottle throwing, and I've made some on-the-spot drink creations, but I also just hang out and get to know my regulars."

Describe your bar: "A neighborhood bar wi a little bit of everything, whether it's nerd night, complete with Powerpoint presentations by MIT grad students, or pack rock shows, we always seem to have a great time. Toast is a great venue, with tons of ro at the bar, a cranking sound system and a dance floor that's always packed [with a primarily lesbian crowd] on Friday nights."

Why do you think your regulars return to your bar again and again? "It's either the company or the $2.50 Pabst Blue Ribbon. I work with such a great crew, and I think tha having fun at what you do is contagious."

Your trademark: "My biggest trademark i my suitcase of bar tools: zesters, tins, muddlers, flat keys—you name it, I have it. Some call me obsessed. Others invite me to their parties. SERENDIPITOUS SHOPPING: OUR UNFETTERED CORRESPONDENT SEEKS OUT THE SALUBRIOUS AND THE CEREBRAL.

BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY

GOOD KARMA

Born in India, Brookline's Rishi Reddi covers cultural confusion in Karma and Other Stories.

The Indian characters in these short stories live in and around Boston, with feet delicately, and often painfully, planted both here and overseas. Having lived stateside and abroad herself, Reddi is adept at conveying their excruciating sensitivity to the shifting tectonic plates of identity. Two young, Indian South Enders, thoroughly Americanized, respond flippantly to their parents' schemes to arrange marriages for them. But when one falls for the chosen guy, calling it her own decision, her friend feels betrayed and chafes bitterly. In another story, two transplanted Indian men, old friends, lunch together at "a fast food establishment." One, a rather formal retired judge, orders a bean dish but is erroneously served beef, against "the customs of [his] faith." Full of offended rectitude, he tries to bring a lawsuit and is shamed by having it deemed frivolous. In "Devadasi," 16-year-old Uma, lost in the erotic mists and confusions of an American romance, is taken to India for a family wedding, lured by the chance to privately study traditional dance. In her not-quite-homeland, she's awakened to frightening religious conflicts and cultural exoticisms. Reddi's writing, subtle and textured, makes you wince with sympathy, and a kind of cultural unease.

SPIRITUOUS SANDWICHES

Darwin's Ltd. (1629 Cambridge St., Cambridge, 617-491-2999; 148 Mt. Auburn St., Cambridge, 617-354-5233; www.darwinsltd.com) gives grub a good name.

With a slightly arch English tone, Darwin's Ltd. serves up "comestibles and spirituous provisions" at it two locations just outside Harvard Square. Translation: scrumptious sandwiches (named for loca streets) and then some. Take the Magnolia, a mix of hummus, avocado, apple, carrots, tomato, sprout honey mustard and cheddar. Or the Trowbridge, packed with prosciutto, pesto and fresh mozzarella The daily focaccia special—a slab to feed many mouths—presents a fun option; it's sliced to your de sired length and paid for by the pound. You can get groovy groceries—wasabi-flavored pickles, Tofut cream cheese for bagels, healthy Odwalla drinks—and take-out dinners, too. The young staffers act ac cordingly hip, smiling and sometimes sporting tattoos, which adds to the overall vibe. The Cambridg Street spot suggests a "1920s bordello style," the owner says, complete with arty lamps and worn Orien tal carpets. At Mt. Auburn the walls are painted in dreamy red gradations, producing yet anothe mood. When the weather cooperates, gaggles of students removed from the clog of the Square an families with little kids spill onto streetside benches.

PET ENLIGHTENMENT

Zen Dog (617-233-5496; www.bostonzendog.com) puts the "can" in canine training.

Fresh air streams around Gordon Fontaine, a ce tified dog trainer who practices Aikido in ful flowing fashion. It's all about Zen energy with th guy, whose pet philosophy eschews punitive coll yanking and "bad dog" scolding in favor of pos tive reinforcement. Like the dolphin trainer wh famously wrote of treating her husband like one her animal charges, only affirming agreeable b havior, Fontaine teaches his clients to strateg cally, cannily reward good deeds, using varyi voice tones. "Interrupt, redirect and provide legal alternative" is the mantra of his elegant i terventions. And since pooches live in the Ze present—not relating a punishment now to a p accident then—he capitalizes on the approac Fontaine has owners attend to body language (dog's first language"), teaching ritualized actio such as "sit to greet" people and "down, stay" b fore going outdoors. Treats are carefully meted o to yearning Fido—and thus internalized as a go star, the thinking goes. Zen Dog offers priva consultations and makes home visits. Group o tions include a six-week puppy package. For re rascals, there's Naughty Dog, a one-on-one trai ing series that tackles tougher issues.

REVIEW

PUT TO THE TEST

LTK, the newest venture from Legal Sea Foods, scores mostly high marks.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

What can I say about the Legal Sea Foods organization? First of all, its clever, compelling motto appeals to me as both a lawyer and a food writer: "If it isn't fresh, it isn't legal." Whether owner Roger Berkowitz himself or a hired wordsmith devised that elegant epigram, it sure says it all. Second, Legal sets such a high standard for Boston seafood dining that it's a major factor in the hospitality industry both here and beyond the borders of the Commonwealth.

You'd think that having to maintain such a reputation for reliability and consistency would stifle creative innovations. Instead Berkowitz and company came up with a new restaurant concept, LTK, which stands for Legal Test Kitchen. Under this moniker, Legal sheds its sameness and ventures into the unknown, experimenting with specials to see if they deserve a place on the standard Legal menu. The company operates two LTK venues, the principal one on Northern Avenue in the Seaport and a smaller satellite in Terminal A at Logan Airport. While I haven't visited the latter, I've dined at the Northern Avenue site four times.

Though the exodus from the neighborhood's office towers depopulates the Seaport in the evening, on most of my visits to LTK—all midweek—few empty tables beckoned. Arriving without a reservation means a wait lasting anywhere from 10 minutes to a half hour, depending on the size of the party. LTK's enlightened and consumer-friendly wine program may constitute one key to its popularity. It offers 55 wines, 29 by the glass, both reds and whites, at very reasonable prices ranging from $5.95 to $7.95 for a six-ounce pour. It also offers two- and four-ounce glasses, at proportionately lower prices. Surprisingly, bottle prices closely track the per-ounce cost by the glass. If this policy were followed by more restaurants, the all-too-common practice of pricing wine by the glass so as to recover the wholesale cost of the entire bottle with the sale of that first glass might come to a well-deserved demise.

Over my four dinners at LTK, I sampled five different wines by the glass—all red and all but one at LTK's lowest price point of $5.95. My one "splurge," the 2005 Morande Terrarum Reserve pinot noir from Chile ($6.75), turned out to be worth the extra 80 cents and then some. Its magical, floral bouquet, good acidity and refined finish made it a standout. Of the others, the Elsa Bianchi 2004 malbec from Mendoza, Argentina, reminded me why I like this grape so much: It's full-bodied, with good tannins and robust flavor. Also enjoyable was the Vinos Sin Ley "G-2," a 2004 granache from Montsant, Spain, whose name literally means "wines without laws," suggesting a revolt against the regulators. Its uncharacteristic mellowness, combined with the acidity for which granache is known, made it an especially enjoyable quaff. For non–wine drinkers, LTK's beer list included five on tap and more than 20 by the bottle—Belgian, Dutch, English, German and Mexican as well as American brands, all at friendly prices.

The thought and care that went int putting together LTK's list of libatior would've been all for naught if its kitche didn't produce food worthy of their com pany. Fortunately, it was equal to the tasl All dinners began on a high note, with basket of crisp-crusted rolls accompanie by a delicious white-bean purée steeped i garlic, basil and olive oil. Starters, groupe on LTK's quirky menu in various categorie with names like "simmer," "refresh," "bare and "nosh," included a terrific white clai pizzetta ($11.95). Supporting a generou layer of moist, garlicky, spicy choppe clams, shavings of Pecorino Roman cheese and ribbons of minty, fresh basi this pizza's ultrathin, crispy whole-whea crust made it outstanding. The four-chees pizzetta ($10.95) came on the same crisp crust, but I couldn't distinguish betwee the four or five splashes of what were sup posed to be different kinds of cheese– mozzarella, goat, ricotta and fontina– listed on the menu, perhaps because th spicy sauce of crushed tomatoes and fres basil masked their distinctiveness. Stil the result was a tasty treat.

Other selections from the "nosh" cate gory included fried New Zealand mussel ($9.95): six large, sweet mussels battere and fried in saffron brown butter and gar nished with thin slices of almonds, re pepper mayonnaise and ethereal, crisp flash-fried basil leaves, making for a deli cious and imaginative preparation. Not s the Portuguese stuffed clams ($8.95)– cherrystones that lost their way in a bread stuffing dominated by sweet peppers tha overwhelmed the promised chorizo, result ing in a dish that lacked pizzazz. Althougl blandness didn't afflict the fried calamar ($9.95), which came with provocativ hot-vinegar peppers and tasty garlic aioli the dish arrived cool, soggy and oily, as if i had languished too long in the kitchen be fore being brought to the table.

LTK's main courses, grouped under th "nourish" section of the menu, included more-than-credible steak. This thick, suc culent ribeye ($25.95), a magnificent piec of marbled beef, tender and medium-rare a ordered, boasted robust flavor enhanced b wood grilling. The roasted green beans tha accompanied it, however, had been onl slightly blanched rather than cooked, leav g them almost raw. Fish and chips 13.95) brought lightly breaded and freshly ed fish with equally hot onion rings. Un-rtunately, the French fries, although tasty, buld've been far better had they not be-me soggy by being buried under the fish ongside a mound of moist coleslaw and in-sliced cucumbers. Lacquered salmon 18.95), grilled with a rich, spicy glaze of rry and crystallized ginger, boasted a rich, arm flavor. Surprisingly, the salmon filet as a bit skimpy, dwarfed by a mountainous rnish of roasted potatoes, a requested sub-itution for braised cabbage. From the wok, e kung pao shrimp ($17.95), a delectable ir-fry containing peppers, bean sprouts, illed pineapple and peanuts in a spicy gar-c sauce, featured six large shrimp with per-ct, resilient texture.

I ordered the LTK paella ($19.95) with esitation, since my last encounter with is popular Spanish dish at an area restau-nt fell far short of the mark. LTK's ver-on came through with flying colors. The avor and texture of its ingredients were rst-rate: cherrystone clams, mussels, rimp, scallops, white-fleshed fish, squid, icken and sausage—each obviously dded in the cooking process at the proper oint to preserve its texture. Well-ren-ered saffron rice and edamame beans, all rved in an authentic iron-handled paella pan, rounded out the dish. Finally, I chose one selection from the "mix and match" category of seafood offerings where the diner is invited to "grill it—bake it—crumb it" and select two sides and one sauce. I opted for the broiled scrod ($13.95) and the lively lemon-caper sauce, served on the side.

Of LTK's desserts (all $6), I tried only two, the "big chocolate cake" and the angel food cake with roasted almonds and guava purée. The former, dry and banal, and the latter, overly sweet, both needed work. So did the service, which has generated serious criticism since LTK opened. Servers brought dishes to the wrong table or placed them before the wrong diner. More troubling was the lack of civilized and consistent pacing. Perhaps the result of high-tech hardware, which servers use to transmit orders instantaneously from table to kitchen, courses arrived with unnerving promptness on some occasions; yet others like the cooled calamari arrived too late.

Notwithstanding its growing pains, LTK provides a lively, reasonably priced dining alternative in a frontier neighborhood. Your best bet: Arrive early in the evening, when you can have the full attention of the staff, or drop by for a nosh, a simmer—or even a nourish, if you're really hungry—late in the evening after the crowd thins. Liberty and Lobster

If you think freedom is expensive...

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

It's late spring, the beginning of tourist season in Boston, and walking the Freedom Trail apparently leads to an appetite for lobster—which creates a dilemma for restaurants facing both sky-high costs for the crustacean and the need to please diners.

Although the "market price" for a two-pound baked stuffed Maine lobster with organic chard and jalapeño cream at Mare usually hovers around $55, this year executive chef Christopher Pauls has had no choice but to jack up the price by $10.

"I'm holding it at $65," he says. "I should raise it a lot more than that, but I won't."

What's the response from lobster-loving tourists? "We make our servers tell them [the price] beforehand," says Pauls. "I haven't seen a decline in sales, to tell you the truth."

Although the situation is currently wreaking havoc with his food costs—"right now, I'm paying $16.50 a pound [wholesale]"—Pauls says this, too, shall pass, because what's triggering the increase isn't a lobster shortage resulting from overfishing.

"I was concerned at first, but it's really not a sustainability issue.... The water has just been too cold to go out fishing," he says.

Mare executive chef Christopher Pauls

In Viale Veritas?

Chris Douglass, whose Ashmont Grill is flourishing in its eponymous Dorchester neighborhood, will open another eatery less than a block away by the end of this year. Douglass plans to occupy a big chunk of the first-floor retail space in the Carruth, a building currently under development next to the Ashmont T station. With a working name of Viale (Italian for "avenue"), the project will feature a sizable lounge and a casual menu focusing on pizza and pasta.

Art: In the Hopper

For some of us, the term "Nighthawks" brings back memories of the so-titled movie starring Sly Stallone and Billy Dee Williams. But for a more sophisticated set, it represents the most famous work of American realist painter Edward Hopper. In case you're still clueless: Hopper rose to prominence with his depictions of U.S. life during the mid-20th century. See why May 6-Aug. 19, when "Nighthawks" and the rest of his personal collection are on display at the Museum of Fine Arts' Gund Gallery. Over the course of the three-plus month exhibition, the MFA will offer related activities, including a lecture and reception May 16, and a screening of the film Hopper's Silence June 7. 465 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-267-9300). www.mfa.org. May 6-Aug. 19. Wed.-Fri., 10 am-9:45 pm; Sat.-Tue., 10 am-4:45 pm; Thu. and Fri. after 5 pm, only the west wing is open. $23. —Rich Levine

Sports: Love It

Sports is all about second chances. After a long wait, several stars will get do-overs when they face off against Pete Sampras, arguably the greatest American tennis player of all time. Sampras hasn't competed since 2002, but May 2–6 he ends his hiatus to join some of his peers, including Jim Courier, John McEnroe and Todd Martin, for the 2007 Champions Cup Boston. The tournament, which takes place at Boston University's Agganis Arena, features four days of round-robin action among the eight competitors, with the two best players meeting in Sunday's final. And while we can't promise Sampras will make it to the end—he's got to be a little rusty, right?—Mr. Bridget Wilson is sure to put on a stellar show. Agganis Arena, 925 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-931-2000). www.championsseriestennis.com. May 2-6. Wed. and Thu., 7 pm; Fri. and Sat., 2:30 and 7 pm; Sun., 2:30 pm. $15-$95. —RL

WED.–SUN./MAY 16–20

Tastings: Nantucket Nectars

Early warning! Oenophiles will want to plan ahead. The annual Nantucket Wine Festival returns this month, with four days of sampling and socializing. The gala takes place at the harborside hotel the White Elephant May 17; the two-day Grand Tasting happens at the Nantucket Yacht Club May 19–20. Other highlights include the winemaker symposia, an auction dinner with celebrity chefs and vintners, seminars on food pairings and local restaurant gatherings. Tickets are available for individual events, but this year the Grand Cru package ($525) includes access to all four Grand tastings, a VIP reception, a symposium and three seminars. Start swirling. Call or visit the Web site for more information. (508-228-1128). www.nantucketwinefestival.com. $75-$525. —Leslie P. Kilgore

Movies: Two Tickets to Pornodise

When it comes to pornography, people fall into two categories: those who claim they don't watch it and those who tell the truth. Kim Airs stands squarely in the latter group, and does so to the extreme. Airs, founder of online adult boutique GrandOpening.com, is the woman behind the annual You Ought to Be in Pictures festival (showcased on HBO's Real Sex and Playboy TV). In preparation for this year's event, which presents mostly local, amateur works, she's hosting SmorgasPorn May 4 and 5 at the Coolidge Corner Theatre. The midnight screenings feature new and old adult films, audience participation, prize giveaways and more. So loosen up and try something different. At 10 bucks, it's probably cheaper than getting a lap dance. Coolidge Corner Theatre, 290 Harvard St., Brookline (617-734-2500). www.coolidge.org. May 4 and 5, 11:55 pm. $10. —RL

Little Black Book

WWII film makes pessimism pleasurable.

BY SEAN BURNS

In last year's little-seen arthouse curiosity The Good German—which I'm told is enjoying a small local resurgence thanks to the folks at the West Newton Cinema—director Steven Soderbergh mimicked the shadowy, black-and-white formal tropes of WWII-era melodramas. By injecting the film with thoroughly modern quantities of sex, violence and profanity, he attempted to illuminate the massive gap between our glamorous movie memories and the harsher realities of the time. It was a noble experiment, but not quite a successful one, largely because the film's central mystery was so glum and confusing.

Thom Hoffman and Carice van Houten star in the cheerfully tawdry Black Book

Believe it or not, Showgirls director Paul Verhoeven has one-upped the far more respected Soderbergh with the fiendishly entertaining, extremely naughty Black Book. This is a rousing, rip-snorting, old-fashioned adventure picture told in brightly colored, broad strokes reminiscent of Hollywood's golden age. It's a wild, hammy ride—shamelessly melodramatic and quite shamelessly enjoyable. But just when you're beginning to wonder if a movie about genocide has any business being so much fun, the film's wickedly bitter aftertaste leaves a lasting impression.

Verhoeven has always been a tricky filmmaker to parse. After a string of energetic, envelope-pushing successes in his native Holland, the director made his way to the American A-list in 1987 with the wonderfully twisted and original RoboCop. One of the most deeply cynical filmmakers ever to cash a Hollywood paycheck, Verhoeven's strange, hotly debated forays into the mainstream blockbuster arena included the bizarre, jackbooted fascist send-up Starship Troopers—which, despite some dodgy storytelling, stands the test of time as an eerie precursor to George W. Bush's America. His lurid, deliberately artificial pictures possess a half-kidding aura of camp. In the case of Basic Instinct, you assume he must be joking. In the case of Showgirls, you can only pray that he is.

After the failure of the aptly titled Hollow Man, an empty technical exercise devoid of the filmmaker's trademark subversion, Verhoeven headed home to lick his wounds. During this time, he and frequent collaborator Gerard Soeteman dug up some of the more unsavory research material they had left out of their original, more upright 1977 Dutch resistance saga, Soldier of Orange. The happy result is Black Book, one of the most cheerfully tawdry WWII movies ever made, coursing with the energy of a filmmaker who once again has something to prove.

It's 1944 and the war is winding down. Jewish torch singer Rachel (Carice van Houten) is hidden in a Dutch family's attic like some sort of sex-bomb Anne Frank. But Verhoeven scrapes away any sense of romanticism from the start, as Rachel's protectors force her to recite Christian prayers for her supper and offer kindly sentiments such as: "If you Jews had only listened to Jesus, you probably wouldn't be in so much trouble right now." Ouch.

It's impossible to explain the convoluted hairpin twists and turns that send Rachel into the arms of the Dutch resistance, an organization Verhoeven depicts as bumbling at best, teeming with traitors and casual anti-Semitism. But before long, our heroine finds herself dispatched on a mission to seduce the sad-eyed Gestapo chief Müntze (Sebastian Koch, the Powers Boothe lookalike you might remember from The Lives of Others.) He's not like the other Nazis, a rabid, mouth-breathing lot who seem to have wandered in from Raiders of the Lost Ark. No, Herr Muntze would rather negotiate with the resistance than massacre them. Also, he collects stamps.

Verhoeven reasserts his dirty-old-man credentials, lovingly focusing on the intimate grooming practices Rachel must endure to pass as a natural blonde. And from there on Black Book becomes a breathlessly paced roller coaster of double and triple crosses, bedroom secrets and hidden agendas. With the war coming to a close, everybody's jockeying for an angle, putting their (ahem) basic instincts front and center. The only thing you can count on is that you're always about five minutes away from either a sex scene or a machine gun battle, and you're not going to find any idealists.

Making the only sympathetic character an S.S. commander is just one of Verhoeven's many sicko jokes. Ironically enough, it's when Nazis are drummed out of Holland that things go from bad to worse for our heroine, and these deeply sardonic screenwriters treat the exuberant liberators of their homeland as just a new gang of bullying thugs stepping in to replace the old ones. By the time Rachel is showered with a bucket of human excrement like Carrie at the prom, you may find yourself echoing our heroine's heartsick plea: "When will this end?"

The answer, of course, is never. Which is why Verhoeven sets Black Book's wraparound framing device at an Israeli kibbutz, circa 1956. The final shot serves one last kick in the ribs, a reminder that the enormous chip on Verhoeven's shoulder is there for good reason. That the film is such vivacious entertainment feels somehow disconcerting, as if pessimism shouldn't be so pleasurable. IB

Blades of Glory ★½

The same initially semi-amusing joke repeated ad finitum for a mercifully brief 89 minutes, this cho would-be farce pits Will Ferrell's bloated, stupi macho figure skater against Jon Heder's dorky, ang swan of the ice, and then twists the plot backwards a triple lutz, forcing them to compete in the World nals as a pair. The stars throw themselves into vari physical comic contortions with reckless abandon, the gags never move beyond that same creepily ho phobic Wild Hogs routine, wherein we are expecte roar derisively just because these two dudes look wic gay. Heder recycles his Napoleon Dynamite performa right down to the hand gestures, and Ferrell does same blockhead, oft-undressed alpha-male routine already remember from Anchorman and Talledega Nig First-time filmmakers Josh Gordon and Will Sp shortcut through most of the action in fake-docum tary broadcast-TV montages, almost as if they di have the energy to write any honest-to-god scenes. lone unfamiliar element here is a typically gonzo s porting turn from Arrested Development's magician- nius Will Arnett. (At Boston Common, Fenway an the suburbs.)

Disturbia ★★½

Remaking Hitchcock's Rear Window for this ag cell-phone cameras and broadband Internet ac ain't such a bad idea, but director DJ Caruso's tee bopper spin on the 1954 classic only gets about half across the street before devolving into tired serial k clichés. Shia LeBeouf, not exactly Jimmy Stewart extremely charismatic nonetheless, stars as a juve delinquent placed under house arrest for the sum spying on his neighbors after mean old mom (The trix's Carrie-Anne Moss) takes away his Xbox. G Kelly gets replaced by a topless sunbather who moved in next door (Sarah Roemer), and Thelma ter's role is transformed into that of a Red Bull–a whippet addled Asian sidekick (Aaron Yoo.) C pared to the ADD affectations of younger-skewing thrillers, Disturbia's leisurely pa solidly crafted first hour is a pleasant, charac driven surprise. Such a shame the final reels ree lurid overkill, as David Morse's nefarious neighbo velops superhuman abilities, and his suburban h becomes a booby-trapped lair more suited for a Ha bal Lecter flick. (At Boston Common, Fenway an the suburbs.)

Grindhouse ★★

At once way too much and not nearly enou Robert Rodriguez and Quentin Tarantino's epic to retro schlock is like a museum installation of culture artifacts. Presented as a 42nd Street dou feature, complete with phony coming attracti missing reels and prescratched prints, Grindhou 191 minutes of winking postmodern irony and tilt movie-geek onanism. Rodriguez's flick comes and it's a splattery, chaotic homage to John Carp ter, chock full of zombies, strippers and some bre takingly bad acting. Personal mileage may vary, for this reviewer the joke got old before the one-h mark. Tarantino's snail-paced entry slips into self- ody with endless foul-mouthed chatter and cons close-ups of women's feet. Nobody seems to have Kurt Russell that this was all a goof, so Ameri most underrated actor delivers a fully rounded per mance of equal parts pathos and dread as a washe stunt driver–turned–serial killer. But Tarantino's logue is so uncharacteristically wretched and rep tive, not even a late-game, breathlessly staged chase can counter the pointlessness of the projec its juvenile, self-indulgent stench. (At Boston C mon, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.

The Hoax ★★★

With his curly hair and antsy fast-talking pit patter, Richard Gere seems to be doing a nifty imp sion of James Caan in director Lasse Hallstr breezy, not-bad romp. Based on the stranger-than tion story of failed novelist Clifford Irving and widely publicized, almost-successful attempt to sp bogus Howard Hughes autobiography out of wh cloth back in the '70s, The Hoax coasts along Gere's huckster chutzpah. The plan isn't as ou geous as it might sound, as the reclusive, paran Hughes was already so notorious for his bizarre bel ior, whatever Irving could invent was bound to in comparison with the real deal. There's a lovely porting turn from Alfred Molina as Gere's sheep conscience-stricken research assistant, while Sta Tucci and Hope Davis work their usual snooty ders as the suckered publishing executives. Will Wheeler's screenplay drifts into a few surreal con that the literal-minded Hallstrom can't quite vis ize, but otherwise it's a surprisingly nimble little ture, complete with an unexpected alternate angl

Hot Fuzz ★★★

A cheeky, affectionate British send-up of Hollywood's testosterone-crazed summer action extravaganzas, Hot Fuzz stars cowriter Simon Pegg as a tough-talking, no-nonsense supercop transferred to the sleepy country town of Sandford. Much like these same filmmakers' Shaun of the Dead, Hot Fuzz is a movie made by and for people who've seen way too many movies. The humor lies not in the actual gags, but in the way the flick mimics every stale action-movie trope of the past 15 years, transposing big-gun macho moviemaking techniques from countless urban adventures to a quaint little rural village. It's best viewed as a collection of inside jokes, and buffs can spend hours afterwards pouring over all the little winks, nods and references. Director Edgar Wright has really done his homework here, using just the right syncopated crash-cuts, bombastic hero-worship camera angles and comically overblown explosions. After seeing Hot Fuzz, I doubt it'll be possible to keep a straight face during a Michael Bay movie again, assuming one could ever do so in the first place. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Lives of Others ★★★½

Turns out East Berlin wasn't such a nice place to live in 1984, a year presumably chosen with a wink and a smile by first-time writer-director Florian Henckel Von Donnersmark as the setting for this eerily quiet, breathtakingly suspenseful yarn. Ulrich Muhe delivers a performance of brilliant restraint and control as a ruthless Stasi true believer, suddenly discovering glimmers of a long-dormant conscience when assigned to shadow a fundamentally decent playwright (Powers Boothe look-alike Sebastian Koch) who just might be aiding and abetting some subversive pals during those dark days before the wall came crumbling down. Reminiscent of Francis Ford Coppola's The Conversation, The Lives of Others is all clammy paranoia and creeping dread, with Muhe's poker-faced turn somehow giving you everything and nothing at the same time. It's riveting stuff, watching a man discover just how badly his ideals have been twisted and perverted by power-mongering thugs in high places; enough to carry you through this otherwise crisp, understated picture's weird determination to offer more false endings than The Return of the King. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

The Namesake ★★

Movies aren't novels, an inconvenient truth that apparently escaped gifted Mira Nair, who directed this well-intentioned, borderline interminable adaptation of Jhumpa Lahiri's bestseller. Forced to winnow down a dense, unwieldy 30 years' worth of trials and tribulations faced by a family of Bengali immigrants, Nair opts for the greatest hits approach—summarizing several lifetimes in rapid-fire shorthand. Kal Penn, of Harold and Kumar Go to White Castle fame, stars as the stubborn, ungrateful son, rediscovering his cultural heritage only during his darkest moments of adversity. Drifting almost aimlessly through the decades, Nair's stumblebum reworking not only transplants Lahiri's story from Boston to Manhattan, but also feels more like a rushed collection of half-realized scenes, with her typical keenly observed behavioral details clanging against all sorts of hasty exposition and time-lapse dissolves. Books can afford to linger, ramble and digress, but the best films by and large tend to exist on short clocks and clear objectives, concepts anathema to The Namesake's pig-pile of haphazard incident and epic sprawl. (At Kendall Square, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Perfect Stranger ★

As if Catwoman wasn't already embarrassing enough, Halle Berry continues her sad post-Oscar slide into Sharon Stone territory with this tawdry, not-nearly-sleazy-enough "erotic" thriller that wouldn't even pass muster by Skinemax After Dark standards. Starring as a horny, hard-boiled news reporter (cough), Berry goes undercover at a slick ad agency, attempting to seduce a confession out of a maybe-murderer played by a lost-looking Bruce Willis. Alas, all their flirtations take place online, and director James Foley isn't the first to get gummed up trying to find a cinematic equivalent for cybersex. Foley's a strange case, having directed both David Mamet's Glengarry Glen Ross and Madonna's Who's That Girl. This one bears more resemblance to the latter film, and the peals of raucous laughter that greeted my screening suggest maybe there's a joke somewhere that I just might be missing. Giovanni Ribisi plays an insinuating sidekick who might as well be nicknamed "red herring," and the whole of Perfect Stranger seems like a backdated Internet update to Jagged Edge, which wasn't very good in the first place. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Reaping ★½

Movie studios have spent the better part of a decade unable to find the right kind of showcase for Hilary Swank's offbeat tomboy magnetism, so I guess whoever decided to cast her as a preacher losing faith after a massacre in the Sudan at least deserves credit for thinking outside the box. The latest craven attempt by Hollywood to cozy up to the religious right, The Reaping finds Swank's newly godless university professor making the mistake of seeking a scientific explanation for some plagues of Egypt that just randomly started ravaging a small Louisiana town. Frogs fall from the sky and the rivers run red with blood, but long before the locusts arrive we must first suffer a complicated backstory full of hokum and hooey, one that seems to have been carefully vetted in order to give offense to nobody except logicians. Director Stephen Hopkins conjures a couple of striking images, but the movie is a mess of talky nonsense and fake scares. For her part, Swank remains nearly as unconvincing as the computer-generated mad cows. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Richard Gere puts one over on Hope Davis in The Hoax

Reign Over Me ★★★

There's always been something closed-off and kind of scary about Adam Sandler's screen persona, and, as was the case with P.T. Anderson's brilliant Punch-Drunk Love, this fumbling effort from writer-director Mike Binder uses the goofball comic's autistic flourishes to dazzling dramatic effect. Sandler stars as a former dentist who lost his family on 9/11 and has spent the ensuing years in a sort of emotional coma, obstinately returning to adolescence as a last resort. It's only upon reuniting with his old college buddy (a phenomenal Don Cheadle) that Sandler's slurry, angry Rain Man finally begins fumbling towards human contact once again. As in his Upside Of Anger, Binder proves himself adept at getting transcendent performances from his actors, only to sell them out with pat, sitcommy resolutions. There's a lot about Reign Over Me that feels phony and contrived, and yet much of it is tough to shake off. This time around, Sandler's idiot man-child routine is just a cover for a world of hurt, one almost impossible to fathom. (In the suburbs.)

Shooter ★★

The Artist Formerly Known As Marky Mark breezes his way through this dopey, paranoid slog, making what should've been an unbearable First Blood knockoff a good deal easier to endure. Based on the first in a series of airport bestsellers by Pulitzer Prize–winning Washington Post film critic Stephen Hunter, Shooter follows Mark Wahlberg's retired supersniper Bob Lee Swagger (dig that name!) as he's played for a patsy in an assassination attempt on the president. Dorchester's favorite son uses a formidable amount of offhand, every-guy charisma to offset the sheer ludicrousness of the scenario. Exacting swift and brutal revenge on the sinister Halliburton-esque cabal led by Ned Beatty's positively Cheney slimeball senator, Wahlberg deliberately and deftly underplays this screenplay's countless goofy flourishes. Director Antoine Fuqua shoots everything in mashed-perspective, telephoto lens closeups that, for a movie about a long-range marksman, is either rank incompetence or willful perversity. Boston Legal's Rhona Mitra costars as an FBI agent who takes every urgent phone call in skimpy underwear. Yes, it's that kind of movie. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Fresh Pond and in the suburbs.)

An empty-headed spectacle that leaves a loathsome aftertaste, director Zack Snyder's blockbuster adaptation of the Frank Miller comic book reimagines the Battle of Thermopalaye as a monotonous homoerotic videogame. Gerard Butler hollers himself hoarse as King Leonidas, leading 300 Spartans into an impossible battle with something like a billion Persians, here seen astride mutant elephants at the behest of Rodrigo Santoro's nine-foot-tall Xerxes, who apparently labors under the delusion that he's playing RuPaul. Shot entirely in front of a green screen, with tacky, mocha-colored digital vistas and computer-generated extras added in after the fact, 300 certainly doesn't look like any movie you've seen before. In fact, it doesn't look like a mov all, but rather a chintzy ad for some mysteri swarthy, musky product you probably don't wa buy. 300's over-the-top bombast quickly bec droning, and there's no weight or resonance to der's pixilated imagery. It's just an endless barra outlandish violence and campy hyper-masc posing, pandering to the darkest fantasies of m justed prepubescent boys. (At Boston Com Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Wind That Shakes the Barley ★★★½

Boasting the worst title in the history of mo pictures, famously proletarian director Ken Lo latest pits brother against brother, trying to fi way around the tormented, ceaselessly deb Anglo-Irish peace accord of 1921. Lacking ev trace of the twee emerald spackle that taints cr pleasers like Waking Ned Devine, The Wind tough row to hoe, subjecting the audience to b Black-and-Tan attacks and the violent psychic integration of a once-promising medical stu played quite well by Batman Begins' unforgett psycho Cillian Murphy. A confounding Irish co to Steven Spielberg's Munich, The Wind digr for just long enough to engage every side of a h bly problematic situation, exemplifying the Jean Renoir line: "That's the terrible thing a life, everybody has his reasons." Loach shoot madness with characteristic reserve, hanging in mostly wide shots and eschewing grisly clos for a larger-scale, more contemplative look at lence, as if it was almost part and parcel of rough-hewn Irish landscape. A thoughtful worthwhile film, even if it did ruin my St. Patr Day. (At Kendall Square.)

Touch of Grey

Antje Duvekot finds purpose in exploring unpleasant truths.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

The April shooting rampage at Virginia Tech struck a weird chord with Boston folksinger Antje Duvekot. A centerpiece of her acclaimed 2006 debut, Big Dream Boulevard, is "Judas," a song recasting the Jesus/Judas story as a school tragedy where the angry, home-abused title character is "invisible to everyone" until he lets bullets fly one spring morning.

"I was feeling almost guilty for having written that song because it sort of empathizes with Judas, or at least it tries to explain Judas," says Duvekot, who based the song on both the Columbine massacre and the broader portrayal of Judas in Martin Scorsese's The Last Temptation of Christ. "And on the other hand, you don't want to excuse something like that [Virginia Tech shooting]. It's just so awful.

"But then I was thinking about the song, and it really just tries to figure out why—why someone would do such a thing," she says from her Davis Square apartment. "And I think, in America, we never address that for very long. When a shooting like this happens, we'll talk about it for a little while, but we never make it an ongoing story, like [asking], 'Why are school shootings happening more frequently?'"

Antje Duvekot sees both sides in Big Dream Boulevard.

The German-born Duvekot, who moved to the United States at age 14, thrives on uncovering shadowy truths that lie beneath the surface. "Being in two cultures did make me a little less certain about saying, 'This is how it is,' because I saw two vastly different value systems in action," she says. "So when I write, I try not to be preachy or one-sided, and I paint in the greys."

Those grey details, along with Duvekot's honest, haunting vocal delivery, made Big Dream Boulevard a true revelation for critics and fans. Last year, she followed the likes of Steve Earle and Nanci Griffith by winning the New Folk Award at the Kerrville Folk Festival in Texas, and she's building on that buzz in 2007 by expanding her audience on the road, from Alaska to Denmark and many closer places in between. In addition to playing Club Passim May 17 and 18, Duvekot is set for the Center for the Arts in Natick May 4, the New Moon Coffeehouse in Haverhill May 19, and the Irish Connections Festival in Canton Aug. 11 and 12.

"I'm not sure why I'm so driven to create, but it's definitely something that feels positive and constructive to me," says Duvekot, 32. "When I'm going through things in life that are hard, I always turn to music to process them."

She draws from personal experiences both happy and sad. As a child, Duvekot says, she reveled in old German folksongs at home, in school and around the campfire. "I just started to love music right away, from the beginning," she says. "And my dad was somewhat musical. He always sang to us."

But when her mother remarried and the family moved to Delaware, things changed. "I don't know if you can tell something about people if they don't like music, but [my stepfather] was a real asshole," Duvekot says. "I was in my room for the most part, so the guitar became my world."

That is, until her parents took away her guitar and tapes, even in college. "I was a little more free [in college], so of course I managed to borrow a roommate's guitar," says Duvekot, who had begun to emulate folksingers like John Gorka and later-mentor Ellis Paul during high school.

"They had helped me find beauty in life, when I was having a hard time connecting to people," says the singer, adding of Gorka's early albums, "I didn't really listen to the words that much, and I didn't understand half of them, but the sound was melancholy and the voice was so full of emotion that I could feel what he was saying.

"I didn't speak a lot of English, so I was just watching and I wasn't participating in high school," Duvekot says, "and that observer's role has sort of stuck with me in my songs." As her English improved in college, she empathized with the boldly personal lyrics of Ani DiFranco and Dar Williams. Of the latter, Duvekot says, "She was also shy and struggled—it sounds like that from her songs anyway—in social situations, and she was just so honest and sang about really hard topics like depression and being a woman.

"When I write a song, it's mostly about me, but with a bit of hope in the back of my head that someone else will share the feelings," Duvekot says of material like her wallflower anthem "Dandelion." "It's O.K. to empathize with yourself and put those songs out there, 'cause people get strength from them.... I really do think that Dar Williams made me stronger."

Duvekot plans to broaden both the subject matter and the chord patterns on her next CD, while continuing to grow as a performer—with a self-effacing wit to boot. "Sometimes you just have to laugh at yourself when you're overwhelmed," she says. "And I'm definitely getting to be a lot less nervous, because I'm performing a lot." iB

MAY 2 – 15, 2007

BY ROCKIE GARDINI

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

The May 2 full moon in your Scorpio house of marriageable and business partners signals that a matter dear to the heart of both parties is coming to fruition. Since this promise of emotional satisfaction only comes around once a year, don't squander an opportunity to express how you feel. Mercury in Taurus provides the appropriate words, while your Venus ruler lends grace and charm to whatever those words turn out to be. Also, a thoughtful present—nothing ostentatious—couldn't hurt.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

One of the advantages of being a Gemini is knowing that any choice you make can be adjusted to reflect your latest take on a situation. Remind yourself of this if you have to deal with a boss who's gone bonkers. Madness or utter unpredictability could be the outcome of the meeting in your Pisces midheaven between brusque Mars and unruly Uranus. Since peace-seeking Venus is currently in your sign, you're liable to get too close to the disturbance for comfort. If you do, back off and reevaluate your options.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

Consider early May as an extended holiday. Start with a twirl around the May pole on May Day, continue with a suitably sensational celebration of the sexy Scorpio full moon taking place in your house of romance and recreation May 2, then zero in on a variety of Cinco de Mayo events, which seem to start earlier and last longer than ever before. The one event to keep clear of is an accident in the making if Mars crashes into Uranus while they transit Pisces. However, because the conjunction is in a water sign, Crabs can scurry away.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Some Lions will see a breakthrough in a joint financial matter; others might experience the Mars-Uranus conjunction as an adjustment in a relationship that was long overdue. The entertainers and entrepreneurs among you could come up with a novel idea that'll pay off sooner than anticipated. You're all facing a fairly wild and wooly couple of weeks filled with hard work, but also plenty of commendations to do you proud. This is what happens when your sun ruler transits productive Taurus, the top spot in your solar chart.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

Be judicious in your choices right now. Solar Taurus provides a powerful reinforcement of practical earth energy—possibly more than a discriminating Virgo needs. Too many ideas and incentives to accomplish your goal may be confusing as well as exhausting. So when your Mercury ruler conjoins the sun May 2, take a moment (and a deep breath) to sift and sort. The joyous full moon earlier that day is another reason to pause and see how far you've come since the new moon April 17. What needs more attention? What doesn't?

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

The varieties of romantic experience may have shorter life spans than you anticipate. Thank, then blame, your Venus ruler for provoking a bunch of planets and arousing the people these planets rule. A quickie encounter with Aquarius or Pisces could send you running to a Capricorn or kind-hearted Leo for comfort. Hanging with a Sagittarius is usually fun, but right now that date might cost more than you wanted to spend. Venus saves the best, most intense exchange for the Cinco de Mayo weekend by attracting a soulful Scorpio.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

No matter what else is going on, while the sun travels through your Taurus marriage house, you can't help but become more involved with present and ex–significant others. Whether you factor into their day-to-day doing depends on your reaction if, for example, Jupiter offers easy opportunity to supply your child or lover with a state-of-the-art plaything they insist they need. Howeve during the Scorpio full moon, their attention will naturally turn to you. If there's something you want, th would be the time to ask.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

The productivity associated with Taurus might even rub of on a Centaur with a predilection for procrastination. No kidding—just watch how eagerly you take up a task that you normally would avoid, or at least postpone for as long as possible. Is it to get somewhere outside the line of fire t relatives and/or the realtor have created? A touch too muc disruptive activity at home can upset the equanimity you' gone to such lengths to maintain. However, when bombast Mars moves out of Pisces in the middle of the month, that racket should stop.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Friction, rampant right now, is to be avoided at all costs. This is something you can do by ignoring whatever your coworkers are demanding. Your refusal to pay any more dues, to work harder than you already have, may have an effect in the astral world—e.g., your karma could suffer. But for now, you'll be better off letting the cantankerous throw their little fits which, patient person that you are, yo know will blow over. Meanwhile, there are all those sensua Taurus vibes that need to be integrated into your daily life.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

You've dealt with an erratic flow of income before, but this week, the situation could become a lot more irritating. Whil tough-guy Mars brushes up against your independent Uranu ruler, the natural reaction is to lash out. Try to keep your temper in check; control the Warrior's impulse to slash and burn everything (and everyone) in sight. After Mars moves out of your money house May 15, you may have to find your way back across the bridge that got burned. Ask a colleague or your mate for advice. Better: Ask both.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Every now and then, the Fish drifts too close to a dangerou situation for its own safety. Sometimes you're pushed there other times, consumed by your own thoughts, you neglect t notice where you're headed. Although no one can be sure what'll happen when Mars joins forces with unruly Uranus, since the "disastrous" conjunction takes place in your sign, we're hoping you have a sense of what we're all in for. The way around your personal problem is to be inventive—to think as far outside your usual box as you can.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

The trick for getting through the next few days unscathed is to keep your head while all around people are losing theirs. Nothing in astrology can be quite as upsetting as a Mars-Uranus conjunction, just like the one you experienced last weekend. But because Mars is your ruling planet, you know better than most how to control both the sudden outbursts and the surges of pure physical energy (e.g., go for a longer run). Or launch another project while you're able to tap int Jupiter's ability to glimpse into the future.

Glances on the Green Line

I saw you April 19 in the morning on the Green Line inbound out of North Station. You had nice glasses and a very nice smile. I thought about you all day long and then saw you on the Haverhill train heading to Lawrence later that evening. Our eyes met several times; you sat across from me while looking very handsome in your dark navy suit, nice glasses and amazing smile. I'm on the tail car on the Haverhill train each night at 6:15 pm. If you see me, please say "hi" and smile. I promise to converse.
—Never Waste a Chance

Young and Very Restless

Being underage sucks. Everyone who's been there knows exactly how frustrating it can be. This is why I need your help. Any females who have brown hair, brown eyes and are between 5'7" and 5'9", who for some reason don't need their IDs anymore: Hook a sister up. If this is too much to ask, what about a really good fake one? Any ideas? I'm totally serious. I've been on the hunt for nearly two years and I just want to be able to go out with my friends before they all graduate, or maybe go bowling on a Saturday night, for God's sake! I hate being a prisoner in my own city. I need your help—set me free. E-mail me.
—Enraged_and_Underage@gmail.com

Ring and Run

Hey roomie, in an apartment you pay for but don't actually live in, it's a little unnecessary to call the police on our neighbors and then run off to your boyfriend's place. If their music really was loud enough for a complaint, I probably wouldn't have slept through their entire band practice. Next time you call the cops when you can't handle the noise, at least stick around for the quiet that you frantically needed.
—Your Rested Housemate

No Thanks, You're Tanked

To the drunk Red Sox fan looking for a date: I understand that after a few drinks a little flirting is fun, but I don't get why you thought yelling at me to accompany you to a bar while on a train full of people would do the trick. Obviously you weren't thinking. I'm sorry you were kicked out of the game for not being able to control yourself, but maybe you should've taken that as your cue to quiet down.
—Not Your Fan

Young at Heart

You recently visited us at the Homestead Nursing Home, and I was elected to write you a thank-you, but my penmanship is bad. So we saw this forum in the magazine you left. What an amazing person you are! Your love of the Red Sox, great pizza, good wine, old movies (We need to see Singing in the Rain), the talk about diets, your trips to PR—everything about you lifted our spirits and made us yearn to see you again. We're not shoppers, but were amazed at the bargains you found. (Can you say "coopons" again?) Everything from your pink flip-flops to calling us "baby," made us smile. Thank you for reminding us to make the most of everything and every day we have left on this earth. We're all looking forward to your return for the haircuts!
—Your "bellos" at the Homestead Nursing Home

A Real Whirlwind (Bag)

I was willing to put myself on the line and give a whirlwind romance a chance. Now I find out that you're just not that into me. You could've simply said it—that phrase seems to be socially acceptable these days. Instead, you tell me that I'm the perfect woman, but you're leaving in three months. You're right: I do deserve better. I'm amazing and fabulous and you'd be lucky to be part of my world. You're either a coward or a liar. Regardless, those aren't qualities I want in the people in my life. Leaving me with hope that there might be a future for us is a cruel way to end a relationship. I gave you too much credit for being a decent person, when really, you're just a jerk. I don't need to beg for you to be with me. Plenty of men are lining up outside my door, hoping that I'll lavish them with my attention. Lucky for them, you've just cleared some room on my social calendar.
—Tough Girl

Blue Collar This

To the self-absorbed Brit twit and gal pal on the D Green Line: I boarded the trolley at Copley. It was very crowded, but there was possibly enough room for you both to move in. However, you didn't even try, so I was stuck on the steps, directly below you. Soon, I noticed an elbow flying toward my eye socket. I jerked my head back and saw you rifling through your pocket. I put my hand up to protect my face as you proceeded to elbow me several times and rifle through your pocket. When a woman got off the trolley, the conductor asked everyone to move in, since there was now plenty of room. You unexpectedly stopped at the very top of the stairs, so I ended up pushing you as I tried to get out of the stairwell. At this point you complained about my lack of politeness. You feigned ignorance when I said you had lost any right to complain after having elbowed me. Then your gal pal jumped in and told you not to continue to argue with me—I was "blue collar," had wild eyes, and either belonged on death row or had escaped from death row and could be carrying a gun. Wow—the detective skills of Don Rickles combined with the clever insults of Sherlock Holmes! Do the Starbucks baristas and Whole Foods cashiers know that you look down on them, too? And were you able to figure all this out because I refused to continue to accept your self-absorbed, antisocial behavior? While I was tempted to respond, I bit my tongue because I really wanted to get home and watch NASCAR. By the way, don't think that I didn't notice that while I moved, you two continued to block the door at other stations even as the conductor asked everyone to move in and allow others onboard. Or is it that others should be polite to you, but you can be rude to others, particularly if you've determined that they're "blue collar." YOUR ignorance amazed me. Good luck to you both. You need it.

George Cuddy traveled to Emirates Stadium in London before an Arsenal FC soccer match. Arsenal won, but unfortunately, hooligan hijinks were sparse.

Linda, David and Adam Ferrin, and Isabel O'Shaughnessy (front), showed off the IMPROPER and some festive shirts on a recent trip to Anguilla. Well, either that, or we just accidentally ate some magic mushrooms.

In Denmark, Rosie Johnson and Ariel Levin discovered that Edvard Eriksen's "Little Mermaid" is way uglier than Disney's.

George Regan, Amy Kempe, Valerie Umana, Brehon Cao-Garcia and Marci Tyldesley caught up with Massachusetts Congressman Bill Delahunt in Washington, D.C. Who knew our spring fashion issue could make a group of people so happy?

While in Bad Bentheim, Germany, Dave and Mike Poplaski visited the creatively named Castle Bentheim.

Students from the University of Dayton in Ohio analyzed the IMPROPER for their PR writing class. We'd love to reminisce about our college days, but then we'd really be Dayton ourselves.

THE BLACK ROSE 160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286. www.irishconnec tion.com. Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall-Quincy market area of Boston and is known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef and of course, Mother Sweeney's corned beef, a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself. For thirty years, The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftains, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.
